

Harper's Young People, July 18, 1882

Various

An abstract geometric pattern consisting of various magenta lines, squares, triangles, and arcs scattered across a solid cyan background.

Project Gutenberg

Harper's Young People, July 18, 1882

Various

An abstract geometric pattern consisting of various shapes like triangles, squares, and lines in magenta and cyan colors, arranged in a complex, overlapping manner.

Project Gutenberg

The Project Gutenberg eBook of Harper's Young People, July 18, 1882

This eBook is for the use of anyone anywhere in the United States and most other parts of the world at no cost and with almost no restrictions whatsoever. You may copy it, give it away or re-use it under the terms of the Project Gutenberg License included with this eBook or online at www.gutenberg.org. If you are not located in the United States, you will have to check the laws of the country where you are located before using this eBook.

Title: Harper's Young People, July 18, 1882

Author: Various

Release date: December 27, 2018 [eBook #58552]

Language: English

Other information and formats: www.gutenberg.org/ebooks/58552

Credits: Produced by Annie R. McGuire

 START OF THE PROJECT GUTENBERG EBOOK HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE, JULY 18, 1882 ***

THE SHEEP AT GRANDPA'S FARM.

DARE'S CRUISE;

A BRAVE BOY.

HARRY MILLER'S STURGEON.

MR. STUBBS'S BROTHER.

AMUSING "HIS HIGHNESS."

CATCHING BUTTERFLIES.

TOM FAIRWEATHER GOES TO BASSORAH, THE HOME OF SINDBAD THE SAILOR.

JOB'S TURKEY.

KITTY'S DREAM.

OUR POST-OFFICE BOX.

HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY.

VOL. III.—NO. 142.

Tuesday, July 18,
1882.

PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

Copyright, 1882, by HARPER & BROTHERS.

PRICE FOUR CENTS.

$1.50 per Year, in Advance.

THE SHEEP AT GRANDPA'S FARM.

Of all the lovely things we do, my sister Maud and I,
In summer days, at grandpa's farm, where hills are green and high,
There's nothing that we like so well as being sent to keep,
All through the shady afternoon, a flock of milk-white sheep.
You see, each lambkin knows its name; and when we call aloud,
From every corner of the field the fleecy darlings crowd.
At twilight when the sun goes down, to let the stars outshine,
We bend for them some willow boughs, or dainty budding vine.
And grandma bids us give them salt; they think it quite a treat,
Just as we think of sugar-plums, or bonbons nice and sweet.
But when the frisky little ones eat quick and run away,
to say.
"Excuse them, please, they're very young," their mothers seem
I wonder people think them dumb. I'm sure the wise old ewes
Could tell some things to giddy girls who have no wit to lose.
How patiently they pace along, and let the lambkins play,
And chase their shadows on the grass, and skip about all day.
One never sees them looking cross; and that's what grandpa meant—
That "silly" once, in older days, was pure and innocent.
And in the Good Book Maud and I together love to read
Of pastures green and waters still, where happy flocks may feed.
We know the Shepherd loves the lambs, and oft we pray to Him
At eve low kneeling by our beds, when all the earth is dim;
And when we wake and laugh and play, and when we go to sleep,
We trust that He will keep us safe, as we have kept the sheep.

DARE'S CRUISE;
OR, THE DORY THAT FOUND ITS WAY HOME.
BY ELIOT McCORMICK.

"What a pretty boy!"

Dare laughed and blushed as she jammed down the tiller of her little dory to let the larger boat, from which the remark had come, pass by.

"That ain't a boy," she heard a rude voice reply; "that's that Peters girl from Star Island."

Dare's laugh died out, and the flush turned into an angry red. The first speaker she did not know. It was a girl—a little younger than herself, Dare thought—with a frank, pleasant face and winning voice. But the other was a familiar foe, who had tormented Dare for ten years. Tom Suydam, she verily believed, was the most hateful boy that ever lived. Because he was a rich man's son, and boarded at the hotel every summer, while she was a fisherman's daughter who lived on the beach, he seemed to feel at liberty to tease and annoy her in every possible way. When she was a little girl he had amused himself by destroying her castles in the sand; and now that she was thirteen years old, and did not build sand castles, he would make uncomplimentary remarks loud enough for her to overhear. Dare almost hated Tom Suydam.

It was not surprising that she should be mistaken for a boy. Her short clustering hair, firm mouth, and ruddy complexion gave her face a boyish look, while the sailor hat, and blue flannel waist open sailorwise at the throat, added to the illusion. The costume was nothing more than a girl's bathing suit; but Dare found it convenient for boating, and not in the way when the boat capsized, as had once or twice happened, notwithstanding her good seamanship, and she had to swim. She could sail a boat, Captain Peters proudly declared, better than any boy around the Shoals, and there wasn't a trick of the wind she did not know. In this respect, at any rate, Dare felt a sense of superiority over Tom Suydam. He might be richer, and know more, but he couldn't manage even a row-boat. Dare wondered, as she looked back over her shoulder, and saw the little skiff driving ahead under the fresh southeasterly breeze, how the sweet-faced, gentle-voiced girl who was his companion would trust herself to his care, and how, indeed, she could go with him at all. Dare knew that Tom had no sisters. "She must be his cousin," the girl concluded, as she hauled over the sail on the other tack.

Dare was going back to the Island, having taken her father over to Portsmouth on his way to Boston. The wind was against her, and she had had to beat down the river, and was now going on a long tack to the north. It was not a steady wind, but a fitful gusty blow that warned Dare to keep her hand on the tiller and her eye on the sail. She knew precisely how much wind the boat would take, and she knew too that one's calculations might be upset by an unexpected puff. She looked up at the sky critically, and decided that the wind was shifting. There were clouds in the west indicating a thunder-storm. "It will blow me straight to the Shoals," Dare reflected, bringing the boat a little closer to the wind. The slight change of direction brought into view Tom Suydam's skiff, which, as she looked, seemed to have put about, and to be running on the same tack as herself. Tom had no doubt seen the clouds, and was making for home. It was now a race between the two boats, at a distance of perhaps half a mile apart.

Meanwhile, with every instant the sky darkened and the wind grew fresh. Dare took a reef in the sail, and kept the halyards free, so that she could drop it at the slightest warning. The other boat, however, kept on under a full head of canvas. Was Tom Suydam crazy? Dare wondered. She had hardly framed the thought before a gust struck his boat, and laid it so far over on its side that the mast seemed to touch the water. It righted, however, while Tom, evidently uncertain what to do, hauled the sail over, and attempted to run on the opposite tack. For an instant the sail napped in the wind; then it suddenly filled, and for a second time careened until Dare never expected to see it come up again.

"They'll surely be drowned!" she cried, letting out her own sail another point, while she steered the dory so as to intercept the other's course. The skiff had righted once more, but was lurching wildly, and threatening to capsize with every gust.

"Drop your sail!" she cried, excitedly; but at that instant the skiff lay over again, and Dare saw that this time it would not come up. Dare had already skillfully brought her boat up within a few yards of the skiff, and dropping her sail, she now steered it close enough to take in Tom and the girl, who, though, in the water, had succeeded in clinging to the wreck.

"Well!" she exclaimed, when the two were safely on board, "Tom Suydam, I should think you had lost all the little sense you ever had."

For once Tom was humbled.

"Oh, I say, Dare," he cried, "don't hit a fellow when he's down. Just look after my cousin Mollie, won't you? She's all broke up. I'll sail the boat for you," he added.

Dare gave him a warning look. "You go sit in the bow," she said. "When I ask you to sail a boat for me, I guess you'll know it. There's nothing to be afraid of now," she said, re-assuringly, turning to Tom's cousin, who was shivering with fear and cold. "Only I wonder you ever went out with him. He doesn't even know how to row. Take my coat," she said, producing a heavy jacket from a locker underneath the seat. "I sha'n't need it, and you're just soaked through."

The impulsive little stranger threw her arms around Dare's neck and kissed her.

"You're a dear," she said. "I thought so the minute I laid eyes on you—only I supposed you were a boy."

Dare laughed.

"I heard what you said," she replied, softly. "Now if you will sit here with me at the stern, it will trim the boat, and we can make for home."

But the wind, with the uncertainty of a thunder-storm, had shifted further to the north, and it was apparent even to Mollie that they were being driven far away from the Shoals.

"Why don't you hoist your sail," cried Tom, from his seat in the bow, "and steer for the Island? You'll go to Boston if you keep on this way."

Just then a fresh squall drove the boat ahead with such force that the water broke over the bow, and Tom was for the time suppressed. Fortunately the dory was stanch and seaworthy. It rode the waves lightly, and so long as Dare could keep it before the wind she had no fears of its capsizing. But every breath of wind carried them further away from home. Presently the rain began to fall; and then Mollie, that Dare might not be wet, insisted upon covering her shoulders with the jacket also.

"But I never take cold," Dare protested. "I'm wet through half the time when I'm out in the dory, and don't know what it is to be sick."

"But I sha'n't feel right unless you take part of it," the other declared. "I'll sit close to you, dear, like this, and there'll be enough for both of us."

So Dare did not resist. It was a new experience for her to be affectionately treated, and she did not need the jacket to make her feel warm. As Mollie's arm crept round her waist, and the girl's little head rested on her shoulder, she felt that something had come to her which all her life had lacked. Leaning over, she kissed the upturned forehead.

"You're not frightened, dear?" she asked.

Just then a sharp flash of lightning forked across the sky, followed almost immediately by a deafening peal of thunder. Mollie hid her face in Dare's dress.

"Oh yes, I am," she cried; "I'm awfully frightened. Do you think the boat can stand it, Dare? Do you think we will ever get home?"

Dare looked out toward the horizon. The rain was falling even more heavily; the wind was blowing steadily from the north, and the darkness was shutting down. It was an angry-looking night, and Dare had to fight hard to shake off a thrill of terror from herself.

"There's no danger, dear," she said, bravely. "I've been out in a heavier blow than this, and so long as we can keep her before the wind we're all right. Only I'm afraid, Mollie, we'll have to spend the night out here. But you needn't mind that. You needn't even be hungry, for I've got some biscuit and a can of water in the locker; and in the morning we'll run in somewhere down the coast, or, if the wind has changed, come straight home. I wouldn't dare put up the sail until after the storm is over," she added.

They ate the biscuits and drank the water; and then, as the night grew darker and darker, and finally shut out all surrounding objects, Dare insisted that Tom and Mollie should go to sleep. Tom could lie down in the bow, using one of the seat cushions for a pillow, and Mollie in the stern, resting her head in Dare's lap. Dare would watch, she said. Tom, who was quite used up by exposure and fear, at once accepted the suggestion; and Mollie, after some persuasion, also consented to it, though she insisted that Dare should keep the jacket for herself. Before she lay down she hesitated a moment.

"May I say my prayers?" she asked, softly.

Dare bent over her and took the little folded hands in her own.

"Say them for me too," she whispered.

So Mollie said her prayers; and then, while the wind roared and the boat rocked and the rain fell, she went peacefully to sleep, covered by the jacket which, without her knowing it, Dare had taken off and transferred to Mollie's thinly clad shoulders. For a long time Dare watched the quiet little form, resting one hand protectingly on the child's wavy hair, while with the other she held the tiller and kept the boat still before the wind. By-and-by, however, the clouds broke and the wind veered. The water gradually calmed, the boat rocked less and less, and Dare too had fallen asleep.

Early the next morning Mrs. Peters came to the door of the little cottage on Star Island, and shading her eyes with her hand, looked out over the sea. It promised to be a fair day. The storm had cleared off in the night, and a fresh breeze was blowing from the southwest. Nothing, however, could be seen of the dory, and as the dory ought to have been home the afternoon before, Mrs. Peters began to be a little worried. She had not worried until now, because Dare could not be expected to come home in a storm. The child had no doubt put into Kittery Point, and staid all night with the Grays, as she had done before under like circumstances. But in that case she ought to be coming home now. Mrs. Peters looked toward the little cove where the dory was accustomed to lie; and to her great surprise discovered a mast-head rising above the intervening rocks. The mast was not rocking, as it would be if the dory were in the water. The boat must be drawn up on the beach. But who had done that? Had Dare come home in the night? With a quick beating at her heart, Mrs. Peters ran over the rocks down toward the beach. There was the dory sure enough. How had it got there, and who was in it?

Dare was in it for one. Her head, from which the hat had fallen off, rested on the gunwale; her eyes were closed in sleep; and though the position must have been very uncomfortable, her lips were parted in a half-smile. On her lap rested the head of another girl, whom Mrs. Peters did not know, but who was also sleeping, while a boy reposed in the bow. What did it all mean? With an unusual display of feeling, Mrs. Peters leaned over and kissed Dare.

The girl opened her eyes.

"Is it time to get up?" she asked, dreamily.

"I should think it was," said Mrs. Peters, briskly. "And what I want to know is how you got here."

Dare looked around in bewildered surprise. "Why, we must have drifted," she exclaimed. "We were miles away from here last night. Mollie dear," she cried, leaning over and kissing the head that rested in her lap, "it's morning, and we've got home."

Mollie sprang up, rubbing her eyes. "Why did you let me sleep so long?" she cried, penitently. "I might have helped you with the sail."

Dare laughed. "I've been asleep myself all night," she confessed, "and the dory found its own way home."

Nobody could ever understand by what peculiar conjunction of wind and current the little boat had been carried on through the darkness to the strip of sandy beach that formed its haven. "It wouldn't happen once in a million times," Captain Peters exclaimed, when he was told the story; while Mrs. Peters declared, with equal emphasis, that no one could make her believe that it wasn't a providence. As for Mollie's father and mother, they didn't care how it happened, so long as Mollie was safe; and when they had satisfied themselves as to that, they began to look about for ways in which to express their gratitude to Dare. And though Dare declares that she does not want any thanks, and that it is pleasure enough for her to know Mollie, it is quite likely that something will be done for her benefit. For one thing, she is going to spend next winter with Mollie, and go to school in New York—a prospect which delights Mollie not less than it does Dare. "Only I'm afraid," Mollie remarks, apprehensively, when they are discussing the arrangement, "that Tom won't be civil."

And Dare, to whom Tom has already shown several awkward attentions, answers, with a smile and a blush: "Oh, Tom is such a goose! But I think he'll be civil, dear."

A BRAVE BOY.

Evvie Jerome is a little New York boy who is spending the summer at Bath, Long Island. There is a beautiful shelving beach at this place, and the children have good times there wading in the surf, digging in the sand, and building mimic bridges and forts with snowy clam shells.

On Friday, July 7, a merry group was playing on the shore as usual, when suddenly there was a scream of fright and horror. A great wave had come rolling in, and had caught and carried out of sight a sweet little girl.

There was not a man within reach. The ladies were paralyzed with fear. The bright head had gone down under the dark waters.

But there was a little boy there who had the heart and courage of a man, though he was only seven years old. He had what many men have not—the sense to see what ought to be done, and the will to do it quickly.

Evvie Jerome caught hold of the life-rope, and by wading and swimming reached the place where the little girl had gone under.

The spectators watching the young hero saw him dive. Up he came, dragging the child with him. Clinging to her with one hand, and to the friendly rope with the other, he brought her, half-drowned but safe, to her mother's arms.

All honor, says HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE, to so noble a boy.

THE YOUNG BAGGAGE-SMASHER.

HARRY MILLER'S STURGEON.

BY BENJAMIN KARR.

Thirty-four years ago, boys who lived on the shores of Lake Champlain were very fond of catching the big sturgeons that abounded in its clear waters. Not more so, perhaps, than boys would be now if fine fish were as plenty and as easily captured; but then other sports were not so common in that day, and fishing had much less competition. Often six or seven would go out together with long seines, and some famous catches they used to make.

One spring day several lads about eighteen years old hauled in a splendid sturgeon, whose good nature and intelligence won him quite a local fame, and whose story ought to have been written long ago.

He was such a fine handsome fellow that Harry Miller, a kind-hearted boy who was fond of pets, determined to take him home and try to tame him.

The rest of the party were all willing to give up their share in the prize, so the big captive's fate was settled then and there. Harry took him to his home at Cedar Point, near Port Henry, and put him in a box which he had sunk in the water, and fastened to a landing at the edge of the lake.

The box was about eight feet wide and thirteen feet long, so that a sturgeon could have plenty of room, even if he was over three and a half feet long, and weighed about one hundred and fifteen pounds, as this one did. Harry was careful that there should be plenty of chance for the fresh lake water to flow all through this novel aquarium, so that it was always fresh and pure. He also made a door which could be securely locked, so that he could take his pet out when he wished, and yet be sure that no one would steal him.

The next thing was a name, and commonplace Tom was chosen, just as it might be for a horse or a dog. It did not take Tom long to learn his name, and as he had all the worms, meat, and kitchen scraps he could eat, and was always treated kindly, he soon grew very tame and fat. He was ready whenever any one came to feed him, and when his master playfully patted his sides, he would roll over just as roguishly as a pet puss might.

A Frenchman who lived near Harry Miller's home was wonderfully skillful in training animals, and he persuaded Harry to let him see what he could do with Tom. He found a most docile pupil, and succeeded amazingly, to Harry's intense delight. After several weeks, he considered his task accomplished, and returned his charge to his young owner.

Tom was now ready to do something practical in return for his master's kindness; in fact, he had become a real "sea-horse," well broken to harness, or rather to rope, for that is all he needed to pull a boat.

A heavy ring was fastened through the thick cartilage just behind the dorsal or back fin, and a stout rope was snapped into this ring when Tom was "hitched up," just as a rein often is into a bit.

The other end of the rope was held or made fast in the boat, so that all one had to do to have a fine ride was to attend to the steering. A long pole did duty for reins, and a slap on the water either side of Tom would turn him in the opposite direction.

If he grew lazy, as he sometimes did, a sharp splash just behind would quicken him up. There was never any trouble about getting home after a ride. Just as soon as Tom had a chance to turn around, he would start straight for his box, and swim with all his might until he was once more snugly housed.

While Tom was being trained, he was allowed only about six feet of rope, but after Harry felt sure that he could trust his pet, he let him go twenty or thirty feet from the boat, and instead of short rides he used to stay out as long as three or four hours.

Just think, boys, of going fishing with a fish to do the sculling! Naturally Tom was kept quite busy towing fishing parties, and he worked all the better when he had plenty to do. A vacation of two or three days would make him behave like a colt the next time he went out.

At first he would rush off at a great rate, drawing two men in a good-sized boat nearly as fast as one could row, but he would soon cool down until he hardly wanted to stir at all.

Work every day was what Tom needed to make him willing and steady, and if he had it he was a model of good behavior.

Of course a great many other boys thought it would be fine to have a trained fish, and many sturgeons were caught and petted, but all in vain. None of them could be induced to work, and Harry Miller's Tom remained without a rival, the pride of his master, and the envy of other boys.

Most of the sturgeons which boys tried to train killed themselves by staying too long under water when they were taken out into the lake, and others pined away and died before any progress could be made.

For three years Tom did his young master good and faithful service, but at last he changed owners, and nothing is known of his history from the time he was sold. Harry was forced to part with his pet because the Millers moved away from the lake, but the twenty-five dollars he received was a poor recompense to him for the loss of such an accomplished fish.

But though he never heard of him again, he has always cherished his memory.

Mr. Harry Miller is now a middle-aged gentleman, living in the town of Warren, Pennsylvania, where he often entertains his young friends with the story of his wonderful sturgeon Tom, every word of which is strictly true.

MR. STUBBS'S BROTHER.^[1]

BY JAMES OTIS,

AUTHOR OF "TOBY TYLER," "TIM AND TIP," ETC.

CHAPTER XVI.

A LOST MONKEY.

When they reached the kitchen, the sounds which came from the hen-house told plainly that the party they were in search of had not ceased his work because the household had been alarmed. The snapping of wood could be heard, and if Aunt Olive had not been thoroughly aroused before, she was then, for laths were being broken, and one of her choicest broods of ducks was secured only by such frail barrier against either two or four legged thieves.

"Stop them quick, or all the ducks will be out," she screamed; and, thus urged, Uncle Daniel made a bold stand.

"Get behind me, and hold your hand over the light," he whispered; and then he shouted, as he brought the gun up to his shoulder in a very threatening manner, "Come out here, and give yourselves up at once."

There was no answer made to this peremptory command, and, strangely enough, the work of destruction was continued as vigorously as if Uncle Daniel and his broken gun were a thousand miles away, instead of on the spot and ready for action.

"Come away from there instantly, and save yourself any further trouble," shouted Uncle Daniel, in a louder voice, stamping his foot, while Aunt Olive brandished the fire-shovel to give emphasis to his words.

There was silence for a moment, as if the burglar had stopped to consider the matter, and then the work was continued with greater energy than before.

"Well, I declare!" exclaimed Uncle Daniel, as he brought the butt of his gun down on his own foot with such force that he was obliged to give immediate attention to the wounded member.

Toby had always had a wholesome dread of a gun; but his fear became greater than ever when he saw how much mischief could be done with one as near a total wreck as that was, for Uncle Daniel had seated himself on the grass, regardless of the dew, and was hugging his foot as if he feared he should lose it.

Even though her husband was wounded, Aunt Olive could not stop to offer any aid while her precious ducks were in such peril, as the breaking of the laths proved them to be; and she started forward alone and unarmed, save with the shovel, until a loud quacking indicated that the robber had made at least one prisoner. Dropping the shovel, but still clinging to the candle, Aunt Olive seized the gun, and dragging it along by the muzzle, she cried:

"I'll shoot you if you don't let them ducks alone, and go right straight away from here!"

The loud quacking of another duck proved that she had not alarmed the burglar; and as she was now quite near the bold robber, by holding her candle above her head she could discern in the darkness what looked like a boy, with a duck tightly clutched in each hand.

"It's only a boy," she cried to Uncle Daniel, who had given over attending to his foot, and was coming up; and then, as she ran toward the thief, she cried, "Put down them ducks, you little rascal, or I will whip you soundly!"

The boy did not put the ducks down, nor did he stay for the whipping; but, with both the noisy prizes held in one hand, he began to climb the hen-house in a manner surprising in one so small.

By this time both Toby and Uncle Daniel were on the spot, and the former saw that the supposed boy was using a long tail in his work of climbing the hen-house.

"It's Mr. Stubbs's brother; don't shoot him!" he cried, forgetting, in his excitement, that the gun was dangerous only when dropped on one's foot; and then he too tried to climb upon the hen-house.

"The monkey?" cried Uncle Daniel, as he felt on his forehead for his spectacles, to enable him to see better. Aunt Olive made use of almost the same words; but instead of feeling for her spectacles, she ran toward the building, as if she fancied it to be the easiest thing in the world to catch a mischievous monkey.

Toby knew, if Aunt Olive did not, that it would be the work of some time to catch Mr. Stubbs's brother, and that no threats would induce him to come down. Therefore he put forth all his energies in the vain hope of overtaking him.

Although the monkey was encumbered by the two ducks he had stolen, he could climb twice as fast as Toby could, and Aunt Olive realized the fact very soon.

"Scare him till he drops the ducks," she cried to Toby; and then, to do her portion of the "scaring," she brandished the fire-shovel, and cried "shoo!" in a very energetic manner.

Uncle Daniel waved his arms, and shouted, "Come down! come down!" as he ran from one side of the building to the other; but the only reply to his shout was the quacking of the half-strangled ducks.

"Catch him, Toby, catch him, before he kills the ducks!" cried Aunt Olive, in an agony of fear lest these particular inmates of her poultry-yard should be killed.

"That's what I'm tryin' to do," panted Toby, as he chased Mr. Stubbs's brother from one end of the roof to the other, without even a chance of catching him.

The quacking of the ducks was growing fainter every moment, and knowing that something must be done at once, Uncle Daniel hunted around until he found a long pole, with which he struck at the monkey.

This had the desired effect, for Mr. Stubbs's brother was so nearly hit two or three times that he dropped the almost dead ducks, curled his tail over his back, and leaped to the ground. He alighted so near Aunt Olive that she uttered a loud shriek, nearly falling backward over the wood-pile; but the monkey was out of sight in an instant, going in the direction of the road.

As his pet disappeared in the darkness, Toby scrambled down from the roof of the building and started in pursuit; but before he had gone far he heard Uncle Daniel calling to him, while at the same time he realized that pursuit would be useless under the circumstances.

"He's run away, an' I won't ever find him again," he said, in so mournful a tone that Uncle Daniel knew the tears were very near his eyelids.

"He won't go very far, Toby boy," said Uncle Daniel, consolingly, "and you can soon find him after the sun rises."

"He'll be more'n seven miles off by that time," said Toby, as he choked back his sobs, and tried to speak firmly.

"I don't know much about the nature of monkeys," replied Uncle Daniel, speaking very slowly; "but I am inclined to the belief that he will remain near here, since he has come to consider this his home. But it will be daylight in less than an hour, and then you can start after him. I will drive the cows to the pasture, so that you will have nothing to delay you."

Aunt Olive had caught up the ducks as soon as Mr. Stubbs's brother had dropped them, and believing it was yet possible to save their lives, she had started toward the house for the purpose of applying some remedies.

"It's so near morning that I sha'n't go to bed again," she said; "and I'll get you something to eat, and put up a lunch for you, so you can stay out until you find him."

This offer on Aunt Olive's part seemed doubly kind, since the monkey had done so much mischief among her pets, and Toby realized that it would be ungrateful in him to complain, more especially as Uncle Daniel and Aunt Olive were willing to do all in their power to enable him to catch the fugitive.

"I'll mend the cluck pen," he said, resolutely putting from his mind the thought of Mr. Stubbs's brother, who he firmly believed was trudging up the road in the direction taken by the circus when it left town.

Uncle Daniel thought it would be just as well to remain up also, and he dragged the wreck of the gun into the house, putting it carefully away lest some one should be injured by it, before he commenced to build the fire.

Mr. Stubbs's brother had labored industriously when he set about reducing the cluck pen to kindling-wood; and although Toby worked as fast as possible, it was nearly time for the sun to rise before he finished the job of repairing it.

By that time Aunt Olive had a nice breakfast ready for him, and a generous lunch done up neatly in paper.

Abner had not wakened, therefore Toby was obliged to go away without knowing whether he was better or worse; but Aunt Olive told him that she thought he need have no fear regarding the invalid, for she felt certain he would be much better when he awoke.

Toby ate his breakfast very hurriedly, and then started down the road in the direction of his partners' homes, for he thought there would be a better chance of capturing the runaway if four or five boys set out in pursuit than if he went out alone.

Fully two hours were spent in arousing his partners, explaining what had happened, and waiting for them to get their breakfast; but at the end of that time every one of the circus managers was ready for the search.

There was a decided difference of opinion among them as to which direction they should take, some believing the monkey had gone one way, and some another, and the only plan by which the matter could be settled was to divide the force into two parties.

Bob, Reddy, and Ben formed one division, and they started into the woods in a nearly straight line from Uncle Daniel's house. Toby, Joe, and Leander, making up the other party, went up the road. Toby insisted on this course because he was sure that Mr. Stubbs's brother would attempt to follow the circus of which he had once been a member, although so many weeks had elapsed since it had passed along there.

Leander was of the opinion that they ought to have borrowed a dog, with which to track the monkey more easily, and even offered to go back to get one; but Toby thought that would be a waste of valuable time, more especially as it was by no means certain that Leander could procure the dog if he did go back.

Joe thought each inch of the road should be examined with a view to finding traces of the monkey; but that plan was given up in a very few moments after it was tried, for the good reason that the boys could not distinguish even their own footprints, the road was beaten so hard. They could only walk straight ahead, hoping to come up with the fugitive, or to hear some news of him.

THE BOYS INQUIRING FOR MR. STUBBS'S BROTHER.

At each house on the road they stopped to ask if a stray monkey had been seen; but they could hear nothing encouraging until they had walked nearly three miles, and were just beginning to think it would have been wiser to remain with the party who went into the woods.

At last, however, a farmer told them that he had seen an animal come up the main road, just about sunrise, and that it had gone up through his field into an oak grove. He had had no idea at the time that it was a monkey, and had intended to take his gun and go in search of it as soon as he could spare the time.

Toby trembled as the man said this, for Mr. Stubbs's death was too vivid in his mind for him to think without a shudder of any one going in search of this monkey with a gun. He started for the grove at full speed, fearing that some one with more time at his disposal had seen his pet, and might even now be in pursuit of him.

Of course the boys did not know certainly that the animal the farmer had seen was Mr. Stubbs's brother, but all were quite sure it was; and before they had been in the oak grove ten minutes they saw the monkey himself, hanging by his tail and one paw from the branch of a tree.

Toby was so delighted at seeing his pet safe and alive that he set up a great shout; and the monkey, thus warned that boys who would chain him down to the drudgery of a circus ring were on his track, started off at full speed, scolding furiously as he went.

To catch a monkey in the woods was even a harder task than to "scrape" him from the tent, or to capture him on the roof of the hen-house; but he must be caught, and the three boys started after him, fully aware of the difficult task before them.

To Mr. Stubbs's brother this flight and pursuit was simply the wildest kind of a frolic, and he fairly screamed with delight as he leaped from one tree to another, sometimes allowing them to touch him, and then starting off, at full speed until nearly out of sight.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

AMUSING "HIS HIGHNESS."

BY MARY D. BRINE.

His little Highness sits in state
Upon his rightful throne,
And from his kingly brow all sign
Of royal care has flown.
His little Highness smiles at us
Who kneel before him there,
The while we kiss his gracious hand
And bonny face so fair.

His little Highness, it is plain,
His subjects should amuse;
And of all entertainments, pray
Which will his Highness choose?
There's "This wee pig to market went,"
Played with his royal toes;
And "Trot, trot, trot, on mother's knee,
To Boston baby goes";

And "Patty-cake, O baker's man!"
Played with the dimpled hands;
And many another game like that
Which baby understands.
But best of all his Majesty
His mother's kiss prefers;
For though we dearly love our king,
There is no love like hers.

So in her arms she clasps him tight,
He and his dignity.
He's only baby, after all,
And sleepy as can be.
His throne into a cradle turns—
'Tis mother's knee, you know—
And presently to slumber-land
His Majesty will go.

CATCHING BUTTERFLIES.

BY HELEN S. CONANT.

The boy or girl who wishes to form a valuable and pretty collection of butterflies must set about it in the right way. The first thing is to prepare a net. The brass rings with handles sold by all dealers in sportsmen's goods for landing-nets for fish will answer the purpose, but any ingenious boy can make his own frame. Get a smooth, light hoop about fifteen inches in diameter. If you can not find one small enough, make it from a barrel hoop. Bind the hoop firmly to a rod about three feet long. Now go to mamma and ask her to cut out a round piece of mosquito netting about three-quarters of a yard in diameter, and fasten it to the hoop. Now the net is ready.

The permanent case for your specimens must be a neat shallow box of some pretty wood, with a glass cover. Thin pieces of cork should be glued on the bottom at intervals, according to the size of your butterflies, upon these the insects are mounted by a slender pin which runs through the body. When the case is full, it should be sealed air-tight, for if there is the finest crack, moths will get in and ruin your collection.

You can not take your case to the fields, so you must have some small paper boxes in which you can mount your specimens until the wings are dry, and they are ready to place in the case.

The best thing for a youthful naturalist to use to kill the butterfly is ether. As it evaporates very quickly, it does not injure the color or texture of the beautiful insect, and it ends the life of the butterfly instantly, and without giving pain. There are other things often used by naturalists, such as cyanide of potassium, but they are dangerous chemicals for little folks to handle, and we recommend ether as being safe, and sure to kill the butterfly.

Now swing your net over your shoulder, take the ether which should be in a bottle with a glass stopper to prevent evaporation, the box for mounting specimens, and some fine pins, and let us start out in search of butterflies. We will go first for some of the large ones that fly about the fields and by the road-side.

Down in the old lane by the stone wall is a great clump of milkweed (Asclepias syriaca), and in June there were some big black, white, and yellow caterpillars crawling about among the leaves. Two weeks ago they changed into green chrysalides spotted with black and gold, and it is time now to look for the great Danias archippus butterflies, which will come out of the chrysalides in these hot July days. Yes, there is one now perched on the Asclepias, its large wings opening and shutting in the sun. Go softly, for it is a shy fellow. A quick throw of the net, and—off goes the butterfly sailing away across the sunny field. Hurry over the wall and give chase after it. The boy who would intrap a butterfly must follow where it leads, and stop neither for walls, ditches, nor swamps, or the prize will be lost. There are few butterflies so strong on the wing as the Archippus. But it is worn out at last, and stops to rest for an instant on a field lily—a fatal instant for the butterfly, for now the net descends skillfully, and the great insect is fluttering in its meshes. Gather the net carefully in your hand so that the creature will have no room to flutter and break its wings. Now pour a very little ether on its head—two drops are enough—and it lies motionless. As the Archippus is a very strong fellow—you have already, perhaps, felt the tight grip of its tiny feet on your finger—it may be necessary to repeat the dose of ether, but for ordinary butterflies one dose is sufficient.

Take the dead insect in your hand, touching the wings as little as possible, as the delicate down is easily injured, and passing a pin through its body, fasten it in the bottom of your box. Open the wings carefully, and arrange them at once while they are soft and flexible. A pin fastened between the wings, not through them, will hold them in place until they are dry.

Examine the Archippus carefully, for it is a very beautiful creature. Its wings expand over four inches. They are tawny orange veined with black, and with a black border ornamented with rows of white dots. On the front border of the fore-wings are several yellow and white spots. The under side of the wings is deep yellow, veined and bordered the same as the upper side. Be very careful not to injure the antennae, or feelers, which project from the head; they are very delicate and easily broken. But do not be discouraged if your first attempt to mount and arrange a butterfly is unsuccessful. The first butterfly will no doubt be a forlorn-looking creature, its wings twisted and broken. Persevere, and your fingers will soon become skillful, and you will arrange the wings as neatly as an experienced naturalist could do it.

The dark butterfly in the background of the engraving is an Archippus, and the large one in front, with bands crossing its wings, and with little tails on its hind-wings, is the Papilio turnus—a brilliant yellow butterfly marked with black and blue. The latter is usually found in old apple orchards. It leaves the chrysalis early in June, which is the best time to capture it, as the specimens found fluttering about late in the season are too faded and dilapidated to be valuable in a collection. But there is another very beautiful member of this same family called Papilio asterias, which may be found in country gardens all through the month of July. It is usually fluttering over sweet-scented phlox and parley beds, because it is on these plants that it deposits its eggs, from which the caterpillar, commonly known as the parley worm, is hatched. The papilio asterias is a large butterfly, with black velvety wings, dotted with yellow on the margin. The hind-wings are tailed like those of the Papilio turnus, and ornamented with seven blue spots between two rows of yellow spots, and at the hind angle with an orange-colored eye with a black centre.

There are two pretty butterflies of the genus Nymphalis, which are found all through the summer. The Nymphalis disippe is very similar in color and markings to the great Archippus, but it is much smaller, as its wings expand only about three inches. Look for it near willows and poplars, for it is on those trees that its caterpillar lives and forms its chrysalis.

Its sister, the Nymphalis ephestion, is a creature entirely different in appearance. The caterpillars and chrysalides of both are similar, but, except in size and form of the wings, the gorgeous orange and black Disippe bears no resemblance to the Ephestion in its suit of dark navy blue with black and white trimmings.

Another beautiful butterfly is the Argynnis idalia. Its hind-wings are blue-black, with two rows of cream-colored and orange spots, while the fore-wings, which expand over three inches, are tawny-orange spotted with black. The under side of its wings, like those of nearly all butterflies of the genus Argynnis, is ornamented with silvery spots in a black border. The Idalia loves grassy fields and way-side flowers, and is not difficult to capture.

The tiny butterfly with bluish-brown and copper-colored wings ornamented with black, which is found in great numbers all through the summer fluttering over the grass and white clover by the road-side, is the Lycæna americana; and the small yellow butterfly with black markings on its wings, which flies in such quantities over clover fields that a single throw of the net will often intrap a dozen, is the Colias philodice. These two are the most common of our small butterflies, although there are many more you will find in your rambles through woods and fields. There are the skippers (Hesperiadæ), of which there are said to be more than eighty varieties, that fly near the ground with a jerking motion, as if they were skipping instead of flying from flower to flower. A peculiarity of the skipper is that when at rest it erects only the fore-wings, the hind pair remaining horizontal like those of a moth.

During the latter part of summer a family of delicate brown butterflies may be seen in the shady woods fluttering about beds of fern and moss. They, are called Hipparchians, and are the only butterflies which love shade better than sunshine. Their wings are very fragile, and the net should be thrown over them as gently as possible, as they are broken and ruined by careless handling. The Hipparchia alope is one of the largest of this pretty family. Its brown wings expand a little over two inches. Near the margin of the fore-wings is a broad yellow band in which are two round black spots with a blue centre. The Hipparchia eurytris is a delicate little beauty. It is smaller than the Alope, and each of its little pale brown wings is ornamented with two black spots with a tiny lead-colored centre.

Through the summer and autumn there are so many butterflies fluttering away their short lives in the sunshine that a description of them all would fill many pages of YOUNG PEOPLE. But catch all the different kinds you can find, and preserve them carefully; and if you have no good illustrated text-book in the country, you can obtain one next winter, and spend many long evenings in classifying your collection, and studying the habits of these pretty inhabitants of the fields and woods.

A SWEET KISS FROM DOLLY.

TOM FAIRWEATHER GOES TO BASSORAH, THE HOME OF SINDBAD THE SAILOR.

BY LIEUTENANT E. W. STURDY.

Tom awoke late one morning, to his disappointment, because the night before his father had told him that the next day they would anchor off the Shat-el-Arab River. He sprang on deck eagerly. "Land! Land!" had an ever-fresh fascination for him.

But where was the land? He gazed about him in surprise. The ship was anchored, by all the signs, but anchored apparently in mid-ocean. Directly ahead of them, however, was a black buoy, which, as Tom knew, was not an ordinary feature of mid-ocean scenery.

Tom pointed out this buoy to his father. "What a queer place for a buoy, father!"

"Not at all. It is put there to mark the middle of the river channel. But I see what you mean. You don't realize that is the mouth of a river. Water, water everywhere, and no land in view, eh? Nevertheless this is the Shat-el-Arab River, which we now propose to ascend. Here comes the pilot."

Do you remember, Young People, that the Shat-el-Arab is at the head of the Persian Gulf? Tom realized this distinctly, as they had been steaming up this Gulf for the past week. But could that be indeed a river-mouth?

It was not until they were under way, and had been running along for an hour, that the river narrowed sufficiently for its banks to become visible. At this point it might fairly be termed a magnificent river, with a depth of from thirty to forty feet, whereas at its bar, off which they had first anchored, there was but eleven or twelve feet of water. Yes, a splendid river all the way along its splendid course of a hundred and fifty miles, to the place where the Euphrates and Tigris mingle their floods with its own.

But Tom's ship stops short of this point, at Bassorah, with which city Tom had most vivid associations, for was it not from here that Sindbad the Sailor had set forth on his wonderful voyages?

It was late in the afternoon when they neared the shore, but not too late to distinctly note the character of the place. It was very much better built, and with more of an air of civilization about it, than other Eastern towns Tom had seen lately. The buildings were, some of them, of brick, with glass windows facing the outer world. In short, Bassorah gave evidence on its face of being a prosperous city.

"It is a great grain dépôt," one of the officers said to another. "Those high buildings are grain warehouses."

"Yes, and they are almost always well stocked with grain," Captain Fairweather remarked. "A perpetual contest is going on between the grain merchants and the rats in consequence. The warehouses are in a constant state of siege by the rats trying to get in. Every now and then the rats win the day. They undermine the foundations, and over goes a warehouse."

"How I wish they'd do it while we are here!" cried Tom, fervently.

"Perhaps they may," returned Tom's especial Lieutenant, in an encouraging tone.

The next morning Captain Fairweather made up a party, of which Tom was one, to visit the shore. He pulled to the creek leading to the town, and then embarked in a long narrow native boat. Tom inspected it curiously when he had taken his seat.

"They call this boat a bellem," said his father. "It is hewn out of a tree. Something like canoe-riding, isn't it?"

Two lithe, active Arabs shoved the bellem forward with long bamboos, which they thrust against the bottom or the banks of the creek—or perhaps I might better say canal.

When they left the bellem, one of the boatmen went with them as a guide through the town, and first of all through the bazars.

The bazars were well-built structures, vaulted over with brick. But they were dismally dark, being lighted only by very small windows at the top. A large trade in grain was in progress. They saw thousands of tons of wheat in open spaces, the heaps being covered over with mats.

"Do they only trade in grain here?" Tom asked.

"No, but the season for the grain trade comes first; then comes the wool trade, and later on the trade in dates. First one thing and then another."

As they walked out, Mr. Jollytarre said to the guide: "What dirty streets! Do you ever sweep them?"

"When the Pasha he come," replied the boatman.

"How they do smell!" said Tom, sniffing the air.

"And they will go on smelling," said the Captain, "until some fine day the plague comes and makes a clean sweep of the town. The only clean sweep it ever gets, some one has said."

"The plague!" cried Tom, in horror.

"Yes, the plague. All these filthy Oriental towns are scourged by it every now and then; Bassorah has had its share in the visitation. A long time ago Bassorah had a large population—as high as 800,000, they say, but that is an Oriental way of saying it was very populous. But pestilence, and war, and capture by the Persians, and recapture by the Imam of Muscat for the Sultan, have reduced it to very modest proportions indeed. The Turks founded it, to begin with. One of their early Caliphs gave it the first start 'way back—let me see—in the seventh century."

"Six hundred A.D.," put in Tom.

"Yes; the Turks wanted to keep the way open for trade to the Gulf. These Turks generally know what they are about. But of course the best business men in Bassorah are the Jews."

Here a curious coincidence occurred. A procession slowly approached, coming down the narrow street.

"Jew funeral," said the Arab boatman.

The officers and our Tom gave way, crowding themselves against the houses, as the procession advanced. In front of them it halted. The corpse about to be buried lay in an open coffin placed on a bier hung with black. The persons comprising the procession had been chanting doleful funeral songs, but when they halted they ceased singing, and instead repeated in a mournful monotone funeral prayers as they all marched around the coffin. On the corpse was placed an urn, and as each person passed it he threw into it a piece of money. Seven halts were made, the routine being the same in each instance. At the final one the priest who was conducting the ceremonies uplifted the urn and said, in solemn tones: "We know that no one in the world is free from the sin Sera Lebathalah. We therefore give to thee this money, in order that thou mayst let his body and his soul rest in peace. In the name of the Eternal and His Holy Word, and with the consent of the members of the congregation here present, we lay upon thee the Anathema, which shall compel thee to flee into wild and solitary regions, where thou canst no more persecute any one."

As a matter of course Tom was completely mystified. The Lieutenant had been studying his guide-book. "It's this way, Tom," he explained. "This Jewish community have this curious custom peculiar to themselves. That great long word Sera Lebathalah is the name of a mystic sin or spirit, who is said to be the father of countless dark fiends who torment a man after his death, under the pretext that they are his children and ought to have part of his inheritance. Anathema is a Greek word, signifying that a thing shall be condemned or devoted to destruction. So the friends of the dead buy off this spirit as you have seen, and get rid of him in that way."

"But what becomes of the money?" asked Tom.

"That's more than I can say," said his friend. "But here we are at the grave."

The procession marched solemnly around the grave, and having placed the body in it returned to the town.

Tom and the Lieutenant had quite a walk to take before they again fell in with their companions. They discovered that the next feature on the programme was a further pull up the canal, in accordance with which arrangement they again embarked in the bellem. The canal was full of other boats, which passed them going and coming, the boatmen singing Arab ditties. Great loads of grain came down the stream.

"A good deal of that grain," said the Captain, "goes to Jeddah, and is sold to the pilgrims arriving at that port for Mecca."

In places remote from the Shat-el-Arab or the Tigris it is difficult and expensive to find means of transportation, so a large quantity of grain is used for fuel, and some rots away, or is consumed by rats in the granaries.

"Look at that," cried Mr. Jollytarre, pointing toward a warehouse close to the river-bank, tottering to its fall, as though an earthquake had suddenly overtaken it. "The rats have been having a fine time there."

As he spoke, the building he had pointed out fell with a loud crash.

"Pull ashore," cried the Captain. "We must see what all this means. Jollytarre, you must be dreaming. Rats, indeed!" Hastily running ashore, they came up against a sedate, imperturbable Turkish official, who re-assured them: "It is only one of the government grain stores that has fallen. It often happens. The rats undermine the walls to get at the grain, and from time to time a building gives way."

"Extraordinary!" cried Tom's father. "Well, I don't see that we can do anything here." So they re-embarked.

"These embankments are very well built," remarked some one, when they were again moving up the creek.

The boatman told them they were built by Nassir, a powerful Sheik; that he made a general levy of laborers for the purpose, without pay, although, to be sure, the villages around were compelled to provide food. The laborers made a strike for regular pay, whereupon Nassir built a few of the refractory men into the embankment, and declared he would construct it all of the bodies of the strikers if they did not at once go on with their work. There the strike ended. "As well it might, with such an employer," said the Captain. "And now," he added, "we'll turn around, for if you propose to start for Bagdad to-morrow, Tom, you'd better have a rest."

JOB'S TURKEY.

BY J. R. GALBRAITH.

"De ole speckle hane's done gone en keel ober, missus. Wot's we gwine ter do wid de young turkey?"

These words were addressed to me one fine spring morning by a small and very black boy, whose name was Job. Job always took a great interest in the poultry, and, indeed, was of no little assistance to me in its care. To be sure, he sometimes caused a great deal of trouble, when the chickens were hatching, by his great anxiety to know how they were getting on. He would lift up the hens to see if the little chicks were all out of their shells, and would even try to assist them in breaking the latter open, by which kind-hearted operation he invariably caused their death.

The speckled hen to which he referred that morning had been so unfortunate as to lose all her brood of young turkeys except one, and now she herself was dead. What to do with the young turkey was indeed a puzzling question. It was too young to take care of itself, and none of the other hens would take it, because their broods were not of the same age.

"Well, Job," I said, "I really do not know what we will do with the poor little thing; there is no mother for it."

"Dat's so," said Job; "but it make me feel moughty bad ter see dat leetle turkey a-cryin' roun' de dade hane. De ole rooster-cock he go er crowin' roun' jes ez big ez ef nuffin ain't done gone en happen. Oh, he's a precious vilyen, is dat same ole rooster-cock!"

I reflected a few moments, and then I said, "Job, you may have that little turkey, and when it gets big enough to sell, you can have the money all for your own."

"You don't mean dat, do you, missus?"

"Yes."

"Well, den, dat ar turkey ain't gwine ter die, not ef dis chile kin help it."

Any one who is familiar with poultry knows what delicate little things young turkeys are, and how difficult they are to raise under the most favorable circumstances. What, then, were Job's chances? Not one in a thousand.

JOB WATCHING HIS TURKEY.

Job went at once and put the young turkey in a coop by itself. He then procured some soft grass, with which he covered the floor; and having placed some water and food where the little thing could get at them, he spent the remainder of the day in lying on the ground before the coop, looking in at his new possession.

That night when I went out to superintend the feeding of the young chickens, which duty had devolved upon Job, he informed me that it was necessary to be very careful in regard to the rooster, and from what he said I inferred that he believed that fowl entertained some wicked scheme against not only all the young of its own kind, but all young poultry in general.

"De ole rooster-cock," said Job, as we paused before the coop that held the young turkey, "he come up en look through de slats at dat ar turkey—he did, sho. I hez ter keep a moughty close watch out, I duz. 'Member de time w'en he picked de young goslin' en de leetle chicken ter def, kaze dey wanted ter foller him. He'd do jes dat ar way wid de turkey ef he had half a chance. Oh, he's a precious vilyen, is dat same ole rooster-cock!"

To the surprise of us all, Job's turkey lived to be a full-grown bird, and, unlike the traditional Job's turkey, grew as plump and fat as any turkey need wish to be.

Yes, it lived and grew fat, but perhaps, after all, it was an unenviable kind of life, for it lost that which is the pride of all young gobblers—its tail. There was not a single feather of it left. Job in catching it had so often pulled out so many tail feathers that at last they were all gone.

Nor was this the only trial it had to bear. Job was continually shutting it up, and then changing his mind and letting it out again. One morning, when his mother was picking geese, Job caught his turkey, and gave it to his grandmother to hold until he could fix a coop to put it in. His grandmother, who was entirely blind, thinking that it was a goose, picked almost every feather from its body.

One day Job's father invited a few friends to take dinner with him. The dinner was to be given on the Fourth of July, and Job was very much afraid that his turkey would be sacrificed to the occasion.

"It's moughty feerd dat pap is gwine ter kill dat turkey," he said. "Ef he do, I won't hab no way ter git no money, kaze I won't hab nuffin ter sell w'en de hux'er comes roun'. I hope you won't let him kill dat turkey, missus, he am sich a fine gobbler. Ef 'twas de ole rooster-cock I wo'dn't keer, kaze eberybody knows he ain't no 'count. All he duz is ter walk roun' en 'tend like he's foun' suthin, en scratch up de groun'. Ef he'd git inter de yard, he'd scratch up all de flowers—he wo'd, sho."

"Oh, I guess he'll hardly kill your turkey, Job," I said, trying to re-assure him.

"I don' know," said Job; "It's feerd he will. Yuther day Elder Sales wuz ter our house, en a-readin' outer de Bible 'bout Job. Pap he tole me ter lissen how de man wot I woz named after wuz 'flicted. Den presently he axed de elder whar wuz de passage wot tole 'bout 'Job's turkey.' De elder said he didn't know jes zactly, but he 'lowed he'd soon fin' it. Dey look en dey look, but dey didn't fin' whar 'twas. 'Well,' sez pap atter a while, 'I knows a boy wot's got a turkey, ennyhow, en it's dat ar Job dar; en a moughty fine fat one too. It'll make a good ros' fer us some dese yere days.'"

From a remark that I overheard Old Dick make, I found that he actually did intend to kill Job's turkey. It was too bad, after the trouble the boy had taken to raise it. So that evening when I saw Old Dick, I told him not to kill Job's turkey, and that I would give him one. He bowed and made a great to-do thanking me.

"I'll kill de turkey to-morrow ebenin', so's ter hab it all ready in good season."

Job, who had been weeding a flower bed near by, came up just in time to hear this, and I noticed a peculiar expression on his face, but thought nothing of it at the time. Old Dick then made a low bow, and making Job do the same, the two departed in the direction of their cabin.

Everything went on as usual until about dusk the next day, when Old Dick made his appearance at the sitting-room window, and informed me that Job was missing.

"It's looked ebery whar, high en low, en I can't fin' de po' boy no'ers," he said.

"Oh, he will turn up before long; don't be frightened," I said. "Very likely he has climbed up into the haymow and fallen asleep. You remember we found him there once."

"I clar, missus, I's done look all fro de barn; but I'll go look agin ef yer say so. I 'members now I didn't look in de ole mangers in de wagon-house; but I don't reckon he'd git in dem hardly."

I went about my work, having little doubt but that Job would turn up all right, as he always had done before. But in a few minutes, happening to glance out of the window, I saw Old Dick running toward the house, having lost his hat, and making wild gestures with his arms. As soon as he caught sight of me he commenced to cry: "Oh, missus! Oh! oh! oh! Joby's done gone en fell in de barn well."

I ran out to him at once. "You must be mistaken," I said.

"Oh dear no, missus; I wisht I wuz. De bucket wuz hangin' down de well, en I jes let it down inter de water, thinkin' I'd draw up a leetle, w'en I heerd him a-splashin' roun' down dar."

"It was only the bucket when it struck the water."

"Oh no, 'twan't; I drawed de bucket up, en could atterwa'ds hear de po' boy. Can't nobody help me git him out? De po' boy is drownin' down dar—he is sho'. Whar is Mr. Williams? Oh, missus, whar is Mr. Williams?"

Great excitement ensued. Dinah, the cook, having seen Old Dick come running toward the house, had come out to see what was the matter. Now she ran back to my husband's study, and addressed him in these words. "De Lord help us, Marster Williams, Job's done gone en fell in de barn well."

He jumped up at once, and came running out in his dressing-gown, which, being of light material, was taken up by the wind and floated out behind him like a streamer. We three repaired to the well, where Old Dick had preceded us. Dinah was armed with the rolling-pin, my husband had the notes of a prospective sermon in his hands, which were scattered to the four winds, and I had some fancy-work, which, in my excitement, I had forgotten to lay aside. Truly we were well equipped for extricating a drowning boy from a well.

When we arrived at the well, it had begun to grow dark, and when we looked down into it, it appeared a deep black hole that might extend to the centre of the earth. Old Dick was leaning over the frame gazing into the dark depths below.

"Joby," he cried, "jes keep yo' hade 'bove water till we git down to yer. Hole onter de stones on de side, Joby. Does yer hear me, honey?"

No response from the well.

"Joby," he cried, in a louder voice, "does yer hear me?"

This was succeeded by a confused splashing at the bottom of the well.

"Oh, de po' boy!" cried Old Dick, wringing his hands; "he'll be drown', sho! Joby, o-o-oh, Joby, does yer hear me, honey?"

"HE WOULD HAVE PITCHED HEADLONG INTO THE WELL."

Here Old Dick leaned so far over the well frame that if Mr. Williams had not caught him he would have pitched headlong into the well.

Mr. Williams, having detached the rope from the bucket, fastened it around his waist, and telling Old Dick to hold on to the crank and let the rope unwind slowly, began to descend into the well, holding on to the sides with his hands and feet.

"Oh, dear me!" muttered Old Dick, as he unwound the rope; "ef he wuz ter lose his holt, en de cord wuz ter break, wot wo'd become ob po' Joby den?"

"Here he is!" Mr. Williams cried from the bottom of the well.

"Dade, I reckon?" said Old Dick.

"No," said Mr. Williams; "for a wonder he is alive. Wind up the rope, Richard."

Old Dick slowly wound up the rope. We were leaning over the well frame, peering anxiously into its black depths, when Mr. Williams came in sight, bearing in his arms poor Job? No. What? Job's turkey.

Dinah and I shouted with laughter, but Old Dick looked more distressed than ever.

"Where's Joby?" he cried. "You ain't gone en lef him dade at de bottom ob de well?"

"No," said Mr. Williams; "he is not there."

Old Dick could not seem to realize this at first. When he did, his features broadened into a smile. "Well, I thought," he said. Then he suddenly became grave again, as he remembered that, after all, we had not found Job.

We hunted all over the premises, and Old Dick went around to the neighbors and made inquiries, but it was all in vain. Job was nowhere to be found.

The next day, as I was passing through an unoccupied room at the back part of the house, I thought I heard a noise, like something falling, in a long disused closet. I opened the door to see what it was. All that I could see was a pair of bright eyes peering out from the cave-like blackness of the closet. I started back in fear.

"Don't be skeered, missus."

"Job!" I cried.

The boy tumbled out on to the floor at my feet.

"Don't whip me, missus, please don't whip me."

"Whip you, Job? of course not."

"Is de turkey alibe, missus?"

"Yes. What ever put it into your head to play such a trick as this?"

"Well, yer see, missus, I heerd pap say he wuz gwine ter kill dat turkey las' night. I had tole him 'twa'n't no fittin' time ob year ter eat turkey, but he boun' ter kill it er bust. Well, I seed dat dar wuz water nuff drawd fer de hoss, en I jes cotch dat turkey, en chuck him in de well bucket tight, so he can't git out, en let him down de well."

When Old Dick was informed of Job's whereabouts it was with great difficulty that I prevailed upon him not to whip the boy. He, however, at length consented to let him off that time.

"But ef eber I hears ob sich cuttins up agin I'll larrop him sho. A pirty-lookin' creeter he is, a-skeerin' his mammy en me half outen our senses!"

Job's turkey lived without any more adventures until he sold it for a good price to the huxter. He took the money and bought himself a pair of red-top boots, and when he put them on and walked about the yard he was indeed a happy boy.

KITTY'S DREAM.

Little Kitty Martin
Had a vision in her slumbers
Of little cherub kitty cats
In most prodigious numbers.

They looked just like her own gray pets—
She saw them all quite clearly;
And still she wasn't frightened,
Because she loved them dearly.

Ever so many letters, which the Postmistress reads with great pleasure, have to be left out of Our Post-office Box every week. The little writers must not be discouraged, but try again. The Postmistress has many a hearty laugh over droll letters for which she can not find room in print; and sometimes she cries, all by herself, over some that are sorrowful, wishing so much that she could help the dear children who have troubles of their own to bear.

WISCONSIN.

BUTTERNUT,

I live on a beautiful lake five miles long, but I do not know quite how wide. Our mountain-ash tree has been just lovely, all in bloom. I wish I could send you all the flowers I have seen this summer. What kind of a school-house do you think I go to? A little log-cabin—not hewed logs either—with unplanned seats and desks, and a floor which has large cracks in it. We have a "scoop roof," and for a teacher's desk we have a large box, and for a water bench only a block of wood. There are two windows and one door. We had in the city a red brick school-house, and everything was very nice there. Oh! I forgot to tell you how many scholars we have—six girls and three boys. My sister Fannie and I both go. I would like to have a photograph of you, the one who likes to darn stockings, for I do too. Our lake is pretty rough to-day.

KATE BELLE

M.

Well, dear, there are more luxurious school-houses than yours, but some of the best and greatest men our country has ever had, and those whose names we most honor, attended just such plain, homely little school-houses. It is the sort of teaching and of learning which goes on in school which is of the most importance. A dunce would not gain much on a velvet carpet and at a rose-wood desk, and a bright, diligent girl may learn much that is worth knowing, even in a rough, unplanned building. I think that you girls and boys might coax your papas and big brothers to plant vines and shrubs around the school-house, and make a garden in front of it. The teacher's desk might be covered with maroon-colored muslin, on which bright pictures might be pasted. Wreaths of evergreen, and after a while garlands of autumn leaves, might be hung upon the bare walls. Train some German ivy, which grows rapidly, around the windows. If I were there, I could help you make the place pretty I am sure. I am glad you are fond of darning stockings, but I can not send you my photograph, because I am one of the people who never happen to get a good likeness when I sit down before the camera.

I have been sick a long time, and am not able to get out of bed, so I have not much to do but read or paste stamps in my book, when I have them. One of my friends lends me HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE. I would like to exchange an Indian, a Hong-Kong, a Cape of Good Hope, or a Brazilian stamp, for a 10, 24, 30, or 90 cent of the 1869 issue, the 24 or 90 cent of the 1870-71 issue of U.S. stamps, or the 10, 30, or 90 cent unpaid letter stamps, or any of the U.S. periodical, State, Navy, or Treasury Department stamps except the lowest denominations.

D. J. HAINES,
Cheltenham,

Montgomery Co., Penn.

BROOKLYN,

NEW YORK.

I am not a girl, but a boy ten years old. I saw in Our Post-office Box of No. 139 a letter from a little girl who wanted to know what kind of a pet she should have. I think a bird or a cat would be the thing. I wish the Postmistress would please tell Jimmy Brown to write some more of his stories.

JOSEPH A. B.

CHICAGO,

ILLINOIS.

It is very nice where I live. There are trees in front of every house on the block. We have cool winds from Lake Michigan. Chicago has a great many gardens, and it is called the Garden City of the West. I have three pets. Their mother is a rat terrier; her name is Fanny. I like them very much. They have their eyes open already. They are very fat, and have little feet that can hardly carry their bodies about. I go to school, and learn reading, arithmetic, geography, spelling, and writing. I am just half-way through the school. This is a very large school; it has twenty rooms in it. There is a building in Chicago that is eleven stories high. We will have vacation in a few days, and then all the school-children will be glad. We boys go down to the lake and bathe ourselves, and have a jolly time. We are allowed to fish in Humboldt Park on Saturday; I go there almost every Saturday. It has a very clear lake; there are sunfish, trout, and bull-heads in it.

ALVIN H.

Of course you are now in the full tide of vacation. Is Saturday the only day when the boys are allowed to fish, or do you go to the Park on other days, now that school is over for a while?

DETROIT,

MICHIGAN.

We have a canary-bird, and a dog, and some chickens. The dog's name is Dan, and he chases the chickens all over the yard. We have the darlingest baby you ever did see. She is so sweet! She loves the chickens. I am nine years old.

R. J. R.

LITTLE PATTY.

Cross little Patty sat under a tree,
As fretful as ever a child could be.

"Keep still!" to a singing-bird she said;
"You are out of tune, and you hurt my head."

"Do stop!" she cried, to a dancing brook.
A lamb and a pussy cat came to look

At cross little Patty beneath the tree,
As fretful as ever a child could be.

The pussy cat wondered to see her pout,

moss,

And the frisky lambkin skipped about;
But the brook tripped on over stones and
And never found out that Patty was cross.

The bird in the tree-top sang away,
And these were the words she meant to say:

"You poor little girl, why can't you see
That there's nothing at all the matter with me?

"Mend your manners, my dearie, soon,
Or you'll find the whole world out of tune."

Somehow the wind in the leafy tree,
And the rippling water so wild and free,

lamb,

The bird on the bough, and the snow-white
And the gentle pussy so mild and calm, good."

Made Patty ashamed of her naughty mood;
She shook herself well, and said, "I'll be

And, presto! the Patty beneath the tree
Was just as sweet as a child could be.

STATION, VIRGINIA.

BRANDY

I am nine years old, but will soon be ten. I thought I would tell Kate E. what pet to get. I think a pony would be very nice. I have written to HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE several times, but my letters never have been printed. I hope you will print this. My sister was taken sick yesterday. I have no pets, but my sister Emily has a pet cat. It is very cunning. Papa is having the porch fixed up. Good-by.

S.

RENA LOUISA

TERRITORY.

EDEN, DAKOTA

My papa came here thirteen years ago, when only savages inhabited this part of Dakota. I can remember, when a very small child, how the Indians used to come to our house, and beg for corn and fresh meat, for we used to kill lots of pigs. Papa named this town. Eden is situated in the southeastern part of Dakota, on the Big Sioux River, fifty miles above Sioux City. I have only one sister, nine years old, and I am eleven. Mamma promised me a birthday party, but as I have an invalid grandpa, and my birthday comes in the cold, cold month of December, and we could not go out-of-doors to play, mamma said I might have a lawn party instead this summer, as we have a beautiful grove to play in. I have taken HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE for nearly two years, and am very much pleased with it.

M. ELSIE W.

ILLINOIS.

HOWE,

I am a little boy nearly seven years old. I have never been at school, but recite my lessons at home. I have one Maltese cat I call John Crawford, and another Jerusha (I call her Jerry for short). Jerry has two little kittens; they are just as funny as they can be. I have a shepherd dog named Jack; he and the cats and kittens eat from the same dish, and do not quarrel one bit. Then I have a cow and two little calves, and two colts. My colts are named Dick and Daisy; they are one year old, and my papa says I may ride them next fall. The last, and almost the least, is my little pig Bessie. Papa says my brother Jo and I will bankrupt him yet feeding our stock. Jo is my only brother; he is thirteen. My papa has been real sick almost a year; he expects to go to the sea-shore this summer.

I do hope you will print this letter. I have not seen any from this part of Illinois. If you do, in my next I will tell you about a rat-hunt my grandpapa and I had. I like HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE best of all.

CHARLIE W.

IOWA.

DES MOINES,

I am a little girl ten years old. I have lived in Des Moines for nearly one year. I do not like Des Moines very much. I have written three letters to YOUNG PEOPLE, but as none of them have been published, I thought I would write again. On the 18th of June a cyclone passed here, and on the 22d of June a cyclone passed not far from our house, and mamma said it would have been here if it had not been for the rain. In Kansas, when they see a cyclone coming, they all go to large holes in the ground, and stay there until it is all over, and then they come out again to their houses. I have a cousin in Germany, and she takes HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE too. I have been taking it ever since the first number. I am very glad that the vacation months have come, it has been so warm here ever since the 1st of June.

E. K.

JACKSONVILLE,

ILLINOIS.

Ma says I may write a letter too,
As many of the little boys and girls do;
So I will try and write, and see
How it will look in poetry.
I'm a little girl just twice six and one,
With this world's work just begun.
My father is a farmer, and bridge-builder too,
So, you have guessed wisely, there is plenty to do.

We all help to plant, to dig, and to hoe;
To be sure, in time we've plenty to mow;
For of all good times for children to play,
The best of all is on hay-making day.
Now 'tis our old house I must tell you about:
'Twas built for a tavern, all on a stage route;
Great trees of walnut were cut and hauled,
And placed together firmly to make these old walls;

It looks very old and ancient to some,
But yet it is a very dear and comfortable home.

My grandpa says, near sixty years ago or more

He made latches and hinges for these very doors.

The things that were made then were made to wear,

But now things of that kind you'll find very rare.

He had his shop where he could get the breeze,

And he hung his bellows between two trees,
But now his locks are silvery and gray,
And his house is the best place for children to play.

Dear Postmistress, should you be weary and need rest,

The best of all places is near the Athens of the West.

We take HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE, think it

grand indeed,

read.

And take great pleasure when your stories we

If you will please print my letter,
I will close by signing my name.

NINETTA.

I wonder if I can match this poetical letter by some jingles. Let me try:

An epistle, dear Netta, so charmingly rhymed,
For weather like this I think very well timed.
I'm glad that at grandpa's, when lessons are done,

Yourself and your friends can have plenty of fun.

And I hope you will try to be thorough, my dear,

So that your work, like his, may last many a year.

BALTIMORE,

MARYLAND.

I look forward to the day HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE comes with very much pleasure. The stories are very amusing, and the letters are very nice indeed. All seem to like "Mr. Stubbs's Brother" very much. I like it too. I am nine years old, and I have had three birds. One poisoned itself eating the leaves of the trumpet-vine; another broke its leg; the other died a natural death. And now my other little bird is living, and is very tame. I have never written to HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE before, but I hope my first trial will be successful.

LYDIA D. D.

MINEOLA,

TEXAS.

I am a little girl seven years old. I want to tell you about my pets. I have two kitties; one is named Tabby, the other is named Jumbo. I did have a little rabbit, but Tabby caught it and ate it. I can play four tunes on the organ. As this is my first, please publish it.

ANNIE H. N.

NEW JERSEY.

PLAINFIELD,

I have only taken YOUNG PEOPLE a little while, and I like it very much. I have a little sister named Alice, and a little cousin named Marie. One day Alice did something that Marie did not like, and looking up in Alice's face, she said, "Lallie, you make me nervous." Grandma gave me a year's subscription of YOUNG PEOPLE for a philopena present, and my uncle gave me a bound copy for the year 1881.

E. U. O.

MASSACHUSETTS.

CAMBRIDGE,

I went to New York with mamma to see my grandpa, and had a good time. I liked the elevated railroad very much; I wasn't afraid at all. I went to Central Park, and saw some monkeys, birds, buffaloes, a polar bear, and lots of other things. One bird picked the other bird's feathers out. A man put his finger right in the buffalo's mouth, and another man let the birds eat peanuts out of his mouth. I used to have curls, and they were cut off when I was in New York. My sister thinks I look like a monkey, but I think I look nice. We are all going to Barnum's Circus to see Jumbo. I saw the picture of him in the paper that you send us. My sister wrote this letter for me, because I couldn't print it good enough.

GEORGE L. W.

ILLINOIS.

MARENGO,

I am twelve years old, and live on a farm of one hundred and one acres. I have lots of fun on the farm. I have a few pets; they are rabbits, tame canaries, a dog, a cow, and a little calf. I had a horse, or one that I called mine. One day my dog Fido—for that is his name—went into the barn to catch rats, and he got caught in a steel trap, and it took two of us to set him free, and his foot was almost crushed.

JOHN R. W.

I am very sorry for Fido's misfortune.

CHERRIES.

Under the tree the farmer said,
Smiling, and shaking his wise old head:
"Cherries are ripe! but then, you know,
There's the grass to cut and the corn to hoe;
We can gather the cherries any day.
But when the sun shines we must make our hay.
To-night, when the work has all been done,
We'll muster the boys, for fruit and fun."

Up in the tree a robin said,
Perking and cocking his saucy head:
"Cherries are ripe! and so to-day
We'll gather them while you make the hay;
For we are the boys with no corn to hoe,
No cows to milk, and no grass to mow."
At night the farmer said: "Here's a trick!
Those roguish robins have had their pick."

PEOLI, OHIO.

I live in the country, and we have many kinds of birds, but I want you to tell me why they change so. A few years ago there were lots of peewees and wrens. Now there are none of them at all, and the birds that used to be so shy are building close by, the redbird in the bushes near the front door, the winter king in a hole in an old peach-tree by the back door. There is going to be a picnic just a few rods from our house. I am ten years old, and have no little brothers or sisters. I have two brothers. One is married; the other is older than I. He can draw nice pictures of our house and barn, and lots of other things. We have two canaries, and they go to setting as soon as they lay one egg. We have had lots of pets. One was a crow, which could do the most mischievous things, and was very funny. We have only a dog named Bran, some kittens, and a pet lamb. Bran will stand with his mouth open for Fred to milk in it, and sit before us on a horse to ride. I have a cousin Nelly coming to spend vacation with me. We shall have bathing-dresses, and will play in the brook. There is not enough water to swim in. I wish there was.

ROBBA M.

The new birds must have driven the wrens and peewees away to find other homes. Perhaps you may be able to coax them back again.

A few Sundays ago, while service was in progress in the Presbyterian church at Rome, New York, what should walk demurely up the aisle but a little gray kitten. She stood on the pulpit steps, and looked at the boys and girls, who were in quite a flutter for fear somebody would say "scat," or pick kitty up and carry her out-doors. But nobody troubled her, and presently the little thing jumped up to one of the chairs in front of the pulpit, laid her head on her paws, and fell asleep. There she staid until church was out.

N. P. G.—Messrs. Harper & Brother's will send Toby Tyler, or any other volume on their list, to any address on receipt of the published price. It is necessary only to direct your order to Harper & Brothers, Franklin Square, New York. Letters designed for the various periodicals, or for any department in either of them, should be addressed in the same way.

A SUBSCRIBER.—I can not recommend any manual on the subject to which you refer. A few lessons from a good teacher are indispensable.

A lady of Yonkers, New York, lately sent to the Flower Mission in New York City two thousand clove pinks tied in bunches of fifty each. On account of their sweet, spicy fragrance these were sent to the blind sufferers in hospitals.

Little lovers of birds will send their good wishes to the kind Mr. and Mrs. Robin of whom this pretty story is told. A gentleman in Milton, Massachusetts, owns a mocking-bird, whose cage hangs under the piazza. Near by is a nest containing young robins. The parent birds are busy all day bringing worms to their young family. Twice, says the observer, the robins have been seen to pause on their way to their brood, and drop worms through the bars of the cage to the little prisoner.

ELSIE G.—Your cat is really a gifted creature, but if I were papa, I would not like him to be quite so familiar. Did you ever dress him up with a paper cap, and a ruff around his neck?

GERTIE AND LOTTIE B.—Such a century plant as yours is a treasure worth owning.

BESSIE H. B.—I am glad that you find it a pleasant occupation to help mamma in her garden. You forgot to tell me what you are raising besides strawberries. Did they turn out well, and repay you for your labor?

COUNT RUMFORD.—The ball of the foot must be on the pedal of the bicycle.

MAX L.—The story of "Mr. Stubbs's Brother" began in HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE, Vol. III., No. 127, published April 4, 1882.

C. Y. P. R. U.

GREAT PAUL.—Great Paul is an enormous bell which was cast for St. Paul's, in London, and has lately been hung in its belfry. It measures ten feet across the mouth, and weighs sixteen tons. You may imagine what deep tones will issue from this immense bell when it is rung on occasions of joy or grief. Large as Great Paul is, however, there are bigger bells in the world. The largest one in actual use is at Moscow, and it weighs nearly a hundred and thirty tons. The next largest is in Pekin, where there is a bell which weighs fifty tons. At Notre Dame, in Paris, there is a bell which weighs seventeen tons. The true test of a bell is its strength of sound. How far can you hear it? is the question, not how heavy it may be. High up in the steeple and on an elevation a bell ought to be heard for miles. In old times the bells summoned the people to gatherings called folk-motes. If anything of importance was to be decided, if an enemy's ship appeared in the offing, or there were rumors of an invasion on the coast, the solemn call of the bell hurried the men to a council. On the bell of St. Mary's, at Oxford, this line is inscribed, "Keepe tyme in anye case."

ARAB BREAD.—It is made of coarse flour resembling our Graham flour, and the loaves, which are very thin, are round, and about fifteen inches in diameter. It is placed on the table in piles, and is broken by those who wish to partake of it, not cut in slices like our bread.

FLO.—You are quite right in asking the Postmistress about any little thing that puzzles you. If you and cousin Theodore are both going up-stairs, you must let him go first. In going down-stairs he should step aside and let you go before him. Introduce your little visitor to your mother, mentioning mamma's name first.

A pleasant amusement in summer, when people are coming and going, is found in the game of Preferences. It is played in this manner:

Keep a blank book of sufficient size on the parlor table, and ask each guest to write out answers to the following questions:

Who is your favorite hero in history?
Who is your favorite heroine in history?
Who is your favorite King in history?
Who is your favorite Queen in history?
What is your favorite male Christian name?
What is your favorite female Christian name?
What is your favorite flower?
What is your favorite color?
What is your favorite style of music?
What is your favorite style of climate?
What is your favorite study?
What is your favorite exercise?
What is your favorite book? etc., etc.

We would call the attention of the C. Y. P. R. U. to Mrs. Helen Conant's admirable article on "Catching Butterflies." Not only does it contain clear and simple directions for making a collection of these beautiful insects, but much is to be learned from it of their various characteristics and habits. There is a most interesting article on travel by Lieutenant E. W. Sturdy, entitled "Tom Fairweather goes to Bassorah, the Home of Sindbad the Sailor." The boys and girls both may learn a valuable lesson of presence of mind and heroism from the little incident told under the title of "A Brave Boy."

PUZZLES FROM YOUNG CONTRIBUTORS.

No. 1.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of 13 letters and 2 words. My name is known to all lovers of art.
My 1, 2, 7, 7 is a manufactory.
My 1, 2, 7, 6 is a measure of distance.
My 8, 9, 10, 6, 7 is a messenger.
My 1, 5, 1, 1, 5 is a sweet word.
My 1, 5, 2, 7 is a defense.
My 5, 9, 9, 2, 6 is a girl's name.
My 4, 13 is an exclamation.
My 2, 3, 11 is used both in summer and winter.

GEORGE E.

No. 2.

FIVE EASY DIAMONDS.

1.—1. A letter. 2. A bed. 3. A friend. 4. A beverage. 5. A letter.

2.—1. A letter. 2. A speck. 3. A shelter. 4. A number. 5. A letter.

EDGAR S.

3.—1. In sauce. 2. A trap. 3. A number. 4. Another number. 5. In snow.

4.—1. In chicks. 2. A vessel. 3. A darling. 4. Something good to eat. 5. In ducks.

5.—1. A letter. 2. A limb. 3. A state. 4. An opening. 5. A letter.

R. B. B.

No. 3.

BEHEADINGS.

1.

1. I am a metal; behead me, and I am infirm.

2. I am a garment; behead me, and I am a grain.

3. I am something to use; behead me, and I am elevated.

4. I am not good; behead me, I am not out.

5. I am a flavor; behead me, and I am a fluid.

6. I am part of the body; behead me, and I am a part of speech.

7. I am a boy's name; behead me, and I am a color; again, and I am again a boy's name.

HELEN U. G.

2.

1. I am part of an apple; beheaded, I am a metal.

2. I am useful around the fire; beheaded, I am a home.

3. I am part of time; beheaded, I am necessary to hearing.

4. I am sometimes used for bad boys; beheaded, I am a familiar sound.

5. I am something to wear; beheaded, I am a useful implement.

GEORGIE.

3.

1. I am in a lady's work-stand; behead me, and I am out-of-doors.
2. I am a clever device; behead me, and I stand in the field.
3. I am a medicine; behead me, I am under-foot.

MADGE.

No. 4.

TRANSPOSITION.

A redyra clpea dlowu eb sith htrea,
 Rewe ethre on tilelt elpoep ni ti;
 Eht gnos fo ilef lduow eols sti htrim,
 Erwe ethre on lichnerd ot ebign ti.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN No. 139.

No. 1.

WASTE S A I N T
 A D O R N A I M E R
 S O L I D I M A G E
 T R I C E N E G U S
 E N D E R T R E S S

No. 2.

Buckram.

No. 3.

HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE. Harp. Eagle. You. Sugar. Poe.

No. 4.

J es C
 U n A
 L eav E
 I vie S
 U n A
 S teame R

No. 5.

A	D	S
ICE	LIE	DUE
ACORN	DIARY	SUNNY
ERA	ERR	END
N	Y	Y

Correct answers to puzzles have been received from "Fay," "Fern Heather," Lucie Timpson, Emil Hirsh, Eddie S. Hequembourg, Annie Meeker, Maud Mary Chambers, Florence V. Williams, Benjamin Smith, Lottie Hope, Ernest Pullen, Norman Cary, Elsie, "Rose-bud," "Fuss and Feathers," "Bright Eyes," C. J. C., Leslie Meigs, "Empire City," Annis Temple, John P. Mott, Emma Ray, Louise Prescott, Guy Paynter, Viola C., Ray M., Evarts Folsom, Etta Wheelock, and Flossie Dean.

[For Exchanges, see 2d and 3d pages of cover.]

THE PLAYMATES.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY SINGHI.

THE FOX'S DINNER PARTY.

BY F. CASSIDY.

One of the funniest animal stories I ever heard was lately told by a sober Quaker gentleman from New Jersey, who said it was related to him by the eye-witness himself. He was one day in a field near a stream, where several geese were swimming. Presently he observed one of them disappear under water with a sudden jerk. While he looked for her to rise again he saw a fox emerge from the water, and trot off to the woods with the unfortunate goose in his mouth.

The fox chanced to go in a direction where it was easy to watch his movements. He carried his burden to a recess under an overhanging rock. Here he scratched away a mass of dry leaves, made a hole, hid his treasure within, and covered it up very carefully. Then off he went to the stream again, entered behind the flock of geese, and floated noiselessly along, with merely the tip of his nose visible above the surface. But this time he was not so fortunate in his manœuvre. The geese by some means took the alarm, and flew away with a loud cackling.

The fox, finding himself defeated, walked off in the direction opposite to the place where his victim was buried. The man went to the place, uncovered the hole, put the goose in his basket, replaced the leaves carefully, and stood patiently at a distance to watch further proceedings. The sly thief soon returned with another fox, whom he had apparently invited to dine with him. They trotted along right merrily, swinging their tails, snuffing the air, and smacking their lips in expectation of a rich repast.

When they arrived under the rocks, Reynard eagerly scratched away the leaves; but, lo! his dinner had disappeared. He looked at his companion, and plainly saw by his countenance that he more than doubted whether any goose was ever there at all. Appearances were certainly very much against the host. His tail slunk between his legs, and he held his head down, looking sideways, with a timid glance, at his disappointed companion. Indignant at what he supposed to be an attempt to get up a character for generosity on false pretenses, the offended guest seized his unlucky associate and cuffed him most unmercifully. Poor Reynard bore the infliction with the utmost patience and sneaked off, as if aware that he received no more than might naturally be expected under the peculiar circumstances.

PARLOR MAGIC.

HOW TO MAKE A QUARTER PASS INTO A BALL OF WORSTED.

Procure a ball of worsted, and also a piece of tin about three inches long and about an inch and a quarter broad, and turn up one-eighth of an inch of it on each side at an angle inward, and roll the worsted round this piece of tin until you make a ball, taking care to leave that part of the ball where one end of the tin slide is open so as to enable you to drop the quarter into it.

The ball of worsted is now placed on the table, and having borrowed a quarter, which you get the owner to mark, you turn to the table, and take up the worsted ball, dropping the marked quarter quickly down the slide or tube, which you then secretly withdraw from the ball. Now turn to the audience, and show them the ball of worsted (the hole where the tube was taken from will not be visible), and hold up a quarter (another one) which you have had secreted in your right hand until now, or which you can have fastened to an elastic attached to the inside of your sleeve, and inform them you will pass the coin into the ball.

Now get one of the company to cover the ball of worsted with a tumbler; hold up the quarter, and say, "Presto, go, fly!" then pretend to throw the quarter to the ball. Give one end of the worsted to the company to unwind, when the marked quarter will be found in the centre of the ball.

THE THERMOMETER AT 100°—ENJOYING FREE(ZE) SEATS.

FOOTNOTES:

[1] Begun in No. 127, HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE.

 END OF THE PROJECT GUTENBERG EBOOK HARPER'S
YOUNG PEOPLE, JULY 18, 1882 ***

Updated editions will replace the previous one—the old editions will be renamed.

Creating the works from print editions not protected by U.S. copyright law means that no one owns a United States copyright in these works, so the Foundation (and you!) can copy and distribute it in the United States without permission and without paying copyright royalties. Special rules, set forth in the General Terms of Use part of this license, apply to copying and distributing Project Gutenberg™ electronic works to protect the PROJECT GUTENBERG™ concept and trademark. Project Gutenberg is a registered trademark, and may not be used if you charge for an eBook, except by following the terms of the trademark license, including paying royalties for use of the Project Gutenberg trademark. If you do not charge anything for copies of this eBook, complying with the trademark license is very easy. You may use this eBook for nearly any purpose such as creation of derivative works, reports, performances and research. Project Gutenberg eBooks may be modified and printed and given away—you may do practically ANYTHING in the United States with eBooks not protected by U.S. copyright law. Redistribution is subject to the trademark license, especially commercial redistribution.

START: FULL LICENSE

THE FULL PROJECT GUTENBERG™ LICENSE

PLEASE READ THIS BEFORE YOU DISTRIBUTE OR USE THIS WORK

To protect the Project Gutenberg™ mission of promoting the free distribution of electronic works, by using or distributing this work (or any other work associated in any way with the phrase “Project Gutenberg”), you agree to comply with all the terms of the Full Project Gutenberg License available with this file or online at www.gutenberg.org/license.

Section 1. General Terms of Use and Redistributing Project Gutenberg electronic works

1.A. By reading or using any part of this Project Gutenberg electronic work, you indicate that you have read, understand, agree to and accept all the terms of this license and intellectual property (trademark/copyright) agreement. If you do not agree to abide by all the terms of this agreement, you must cease using and return or destroy all copies of Project Gutenberg electronic works in your possession. If you paid a fee for obtaining a copy of or access to a Project Gutenberg electronic work and you do not agree to be bound by the terms of this agreement, you may obtain a refund from the person or entity to whom you paid the fee as set forth in paragraph 1.E.8.

1.B. “Project Gutenberg” is a registered trademark. It may only be used on or associated in any way with an electronic work by people who agree to be bound by the terms of this agreement. There are a few things that you can do with most Project Gutenberg electronic works even without complying with the full terms of this agreement. See paragraph 1.C below. There are a lot of things you can do with Project Gutenberg electronic works if you follow the terms of this agreement and help preserve free future access to Project Gutenberg electronic works. See paragraph 1.E below.

1.C. The Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation (“the Foundation” or PGLAF), owns a compilation copyright in the collection of Project Gutenberg electronic works. Nearly all the individual works in the collection are in the public domain in the United States. If an individual work is unprotected by copyright law in the United States and you are located in the United States, we do not claim a right to prevent you from copying, distributing, performing, displaying or creating derivative works based on the work as long as all references to Project Gutenberg are removed. Of course, we hope that you will support the Project Gutenberg mission of promoting free access to electronic works by freely sharing Project Gutenberg works in compliance with the terms of this agreement for keeping the Project Gutenberg name associated with the work. You can easily comply with the terms of this agreement by keeping this work in the same format with its attached full Project Gutenberg License when you share it without charge with others.

1.D. The copyright laws of the place where you are located also govern what you can do with this work. Copyright laws in most countries are in a constant state of change. If you are outside the United States, check the laws of your country in addition to the terms of this agreement before downloading, copying, displaying, performing, distributing or creating derivative works based on this work or any other Project Gutenberg work. The Foundation makes no representations concerning the copyright status of any work in any country other than the United States.

1.E. Unless you have removed all references to Project Gutenberg:

1.E.1. The following sentence, with active links to, or other immediate access to, the full Project Gutenberg License must appear prominently whenever any copy of a Project Gutenberg work (any work on which the phrase “Project Gutenberg” appears, or with which the phrase “Project Gutenberg” is associated) is accessed, displayed, performed, viewed, copied or distributed:

This eBook is for the use of anyone anywhere in the United States and most other parts of the world at no cost and with almost no restrictions whatsoever. You may copy it, give it away or re-use it under the terms of the Project GutenbergTM License included with this eBook or online at www.gutenberg.org. If you are not located in the United States, you will have to check the laws of the country where you are located before using this eBook.

1.E.2. If an individual Project Gutenberg electronic work is derived from texts not protected by U.S. copyright law (does not contain a notice indicating that it is posted with permission of the copyright holder), the work can be copied and distributed to anyone in the United States without paying any fees or charges. If you are redistributing or providing access to a work with the phrase “Project Gutenberg” associated with or appearing on the work, you must comply either with the requirements of paragraphs 1.E.1 through 1.E.7 or obtain permission for the use of the work and the Project Gutenberg trademark as set forth in paragraphs 1.E.8 or 1.E.9.

1.E.3. If an individual Project Gutenberg electronic work is posted with the permission of the copyright holder, your use and distribution must comply with both paragraphs 1.E.1 through 1.E.7 and any additional terms imposed by the copyright holder. Additional terms will be linked to the Project Gutenberg License for all works posted with the permission of the copyright holder found at the beginning of this work.

1.E.4. Do not unlink or detach or remove the full Project Gutenberg License terms from this work, or any files containing a part of this work or any other work associated with Project Gutenberg.

1.E.5. Do not copy, display, perform, distribute or redistribute this electronic work, or any part of this electronic work, without prominently displaying the sentence set forth in paragraph 1.E.1 with active links or immediate access to the full terms of the Project Gutenberg License.

1.E.6. You may convert to and distribute this work in any binary, compressed, marked up, nonproprietary or proprietary form, including any word processing or hypertext form. However, if you provide access to or distribute copies of a Project Gutenberg work in a format other than “Plain Vanilla ASCII” or other format used in the official version posted on the official Project Gutenberg website (www.gutenberg.org), you must, at no additional cost, fee or expense to the user, provide a copy, a means of exporting a copy, or a means of obtaining a copy upon request, of the work in its original “Plain Vanilla ASCII” or other form. Any alternate format must include the full Project Gutenberg License as specified in paragraph 1.E.1.

1.E.7. Do not charge a fee for access to, viewing, displaying, performing, copying or distributing any Project Gutenberg works unless you comply with paragraph 1.E.8 or 1.E.9.

1.E.8. You may charge a reasonable fee for copies of or providing access to or distributing Project Gutenberg electronic works provided that:

- You pay a royalty fee of 20% of the gross profits you derive from the use of Project Gutenberg works calculated using the method you already use to calculate your applicable taxes. The fee is owed to the owner of the Project Gutenberg trademark, but he has agreed to donate royalties under this paragraph to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation. Royalty payments must be paid within 60 days following each date on which you prepare (or are legally required to prepare) your periodic tax returns. Royalty payments should be clearly marked as such and sent to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation at the address specified in Section 4, "Information about donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation."
- You provide a full refund of any money paid by a user who notifies you in writing (or by e-mail) within 30 days of receipt that s/he does not agree to the terms of the full Project Gutenberg™ License. You must require such a user to return or destroy all copies of the works possessed in a physical medium and discontinue all use of and all access to other copies of Project Gutenberg™ works.
- You provide, in accordance with paragraph 1.F.3, a full refund of any money paid for a work or a replacement copy, if a defect in the electronic work is discovered and reported to you within 90 days of receipt of the work.
- You comply with all other terms of this agreement for free distribution of Project Gutenberg™ works.

1.E.9. If you wish to charge a fee or distribute a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work or group of works on different terms than are set forth in this agreement, you must obtain permission in writing from the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, the manager of the Project

Gutenberg™ trademark. Contact the Foundation as set forth in Section 3 below.

1.F.

1.F.1. Project Gutenberg volunteers and employees expend considerable effort to identify, do copyright research on, transcribe and proofread works not protected by U.S. copyright law in creating the Project Gutenberg™ collection. Despite these efforts, Project Gutenberg™ electronic works, and the medium on which they may be stored, may contain “Defects,” such as, but not limited to, incomplete, inaccurate or corrupt data, transcription errors, a copyright or other intellectual property infringement, a defective or damaged disk or other medium, a computer virus, or computer codes that damage or cannot be read by your equipment.

1.F.2. LIMITED WARRANTY, DISCLAIMER OF DAMAGES - Except for the “Right of Replacement or Refund” described in paragraph 1.F.3, the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, the owner of the Project Gutenberg™ trademark, and any other party distributing a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work under this agreement, disclaim all liability to you for damages, costs and expenses, including legal fees. YOU AGREE THAT YOU HAVE NO REMEDIES FOR NEGLIGENCE, STRICT LIABILITY, BREACH OF WARRANTY OR BREACH OF CONTRACT EXCEPT THOSE PROVIDED IN PARAGRAPH 1.F.3. YOU AGREE THAT THE FOUNDATION, THE TRADEMARK OWNER, AND ANY DISTRIBUTOR UNDER THIS AGREEMENT WILL NOT BE LIABLE TO YOU FOR ACTUAL, DIRECT, INDIRECT, CONSEQUENTIAL, PUNITIVE OR INCIDENTAL DAMAGES EVEN IF YOU GIVE NOTICE OF THE POSSIBILITY OF SUCH DAMAGE.

1.F.3. LIMITED RIGHT OF REPLACEMENT OR REFUND - If you discover a defect in this electronic work within 90 days of receiving it, you can receive a refund of the money (if any) you paid for it by sending a written explanation to the person you received the work from. If you received the work on a physical medium, you must return the medium with your written explanation. The person or entity that provided you with the defective work may elect to provide a replacement copy in lieu of a refund. If you received the work electronically, the person or entity providing it to you may choose to give you a second opportunity to receive the work electronically in lieu of a refund. If the second copy is also defective, you may demand a refund in writing without further opportunities to fix the problem.

1.F.4. Except for the limited right of replacement or refund set forth in paragraph 1.F.3, this work is provided to you 'AS-IS', WITH NO OTHER WARRANTIES OF ANY KIND, EXPRESS OR IMPLIED, INCLUDING BUT NOT LIMITED TO WARRANTIES OF MERCHANTABILITY OR FITNESS FOR ANY PURPOSE.

1.F.5. Some states do not allow disclaimers of certain implied warranties or the exclusion or limitation of certain types of damages. If any disclaimer or limitation set forth in this agreement violates the law of the state applicable to this agreement, the agreement shall be interpreted to make the maximum disclaimer or limitation permitted by the applicable state law. The invalidity or unenforceability of any provision of this agreement shall not void the remaining provisions.

1.F.6. INDEMNITY - You agree to indemnify and hold the Foundation, the trademark owner, any agent or employee of the Foundation, anyone providing copies of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works in accordance with this agreement, and any volunteers associated with the production, promotion and distribution of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works, harmless from all liability, costs and expenses, including legal fees, that arise directly or indirectly from any of the following which you do or cause to occur: (a) distribution of this or any Project Gutenberg work, (b) alteration, modification, or additions or deletions to any Project Gutenberg work, and (c) any Defect you cause.

Section 2. Information about the Mission of Project Gutenberg

Project Gutenberg is synonymous with the free distribution of electronic works in formats readable by the widest variety of computers including obsolete, old, middle-aged and new computers. It exists because of the efforts of hundreds of volunteers and donations from people in all walks of life.

Volunteers and financial support to provide volunteers with the assistance they need are critical to reaching Project Gutenberg's goals and ensuring that the Project Gutenberg collection will remain freely available for generations to come. In 2001, the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation was created to provide a secure and permanent future for Project Gutenberg and future generations. To learn more about the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation and how your efforts and donations can help, see Sections 3 and 4 and the Foundation information page at www.gutenberg.org.

Section 3. Information about the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation

The Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation is a non-profit 501(c)(3) educational corporation organized under the laws of the state of Mississippi and granted tax exempt status by the Internal Revenue Service. The Foundation's EIN or federal tax identification number is 64-6221541. Contributions to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation are tax deductible to the full extent permitted by U.S. federal laws and your state's laws.

The Foundation's business office is located at 41 Watchung Plaza #516, Montclair NJ 07042, USA, +1 (862) 621-9288. Email contact links and up to date contact information can be found at the Foundation's website and official page at www.gutenberg.org/contact

Section 4. Information about Donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation

Project Gutenberg™ depends upon and cannot survive without widespread public support and donations to carry out its mission of increasing the number of public domain and licensed works that can be freely distributed in machine-readable form accessible by the widest array of equipment including outdated equipment. Many small donations ($1 to $5,000) are particularly important to maintaining tax exempt status with the IRS.

The Foundation is committed to complying with the laws regulating charities and charitable donations in all 50 states of the United States. Compliance requirements are not uniform and it takes a considerable effort, much paperwork and many fees to meet and keep up with these requirements. We do not solicit donations in locations where we have not received written confirmation of compliance. To SEND DONATIONS or determine the status of compliance for any particular state visit www.gutenberg.org/donate.

While we cannot and do not solicit contributions from states where we have not met the solicitation requirements, we know of no prohibition against accepting unsolicited donations from donors in such states who approach us with offers to donate.

International donations are gratefully accepted, but we cannot make any statements concerning tax treatment of donations received from outside the United States. U.S. laws alone swamp our small staff.

Please check the Project Gutenberg web pages for current donation methods and addresses. Donations are accepted in a number of other ways including checks, online payments and credit card donations. To donate, please visit: www.gutenberg.org/donate.

Section 5. General Information About Project Gutenberg electronic works

Professor Michael S. Hart was the originator of the Project Gutenberg concept of a library of electronic works that could be freely shared with anyone. For forty years, he produced and distributed Project Gutenberg eBooks with only a loose network of volunteer support.

Project Gutenberg eBooks are often created from several printed editions, all of which are confirmed as not protected by copyright in the U.S. unless a copyright notice is included. Thus, we do not necessarily keep eBooks in compliance with any particular paper edition.

Most people start at our website which has the main PG search facility:
www.gutenberg.org.

This website includes information about Project Gutenberg, including how to make donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, how to help produce our new eBooks, and how to subscribe to our email newsletter to hear about new eBooks.