Atmosphere

By Murray Leinster

[Transcriber's Note: This etext was produced from Argosy, January 26, 1918.]

It was all in the atmosphere. People don't take incredible revenges in civilized places. Anywhere else in the world the thing would have been impossible.

The heat and the sun, combined with the neat, well-kept horror across the water, with a background of riotous green, and waves constantly plashing gently against the shore, made an atmosphere in which strange things occurred. If it hadn't been for the horror we saw every time we looked across the water, the whole affair I'm going to tell you about would never have happened.

That thing got on our nerves and rendered us unfit for sober thought or intelligent action. It was the leper village of Molokai. Our little settlement was just back from the beach that faced the small iron wharf of the Molokai village. We could see the road leading down to the wharf, the neat, sanitary, comfortable houses, and if we took glasses to it we could sometimes see figures moving about.

We did not take glasses. Every one of us had at one time or another been to Molokai and seen the things that live there. I'll not try to describe them to you. Kipling once said something about men with mildew on their faces. London once wrote a story in which all the people were lepers: a woman, full-breasted, mature, well-formed, and no face: a man who struck out with a hand which had no fingers. Those were appetizing beside some of the things on Molokai.

Mind you, I'm not criticising the colony. The creatures are probably better looked after there than they would be anywhere else, and they can't pass on their disease to clean people. They have comfortable cottages, their food is supplied them, with little occupations to pass the time, and so on. I even believe they have organized a band.

Molokai hasn't anything, really, to do with my story. It was the fact that we could see it by looking across the water, and the effect of having it constantly before our eyes and minds, that makes me tell you about it.

Once a month a boat came to the wharf across the way and dropped food and supplies—perhaps another patient or two. We would sit on the veranda of Colin Drew's house and watch it. Drew's was a sort of club for us, you understand. We never spoke of Molokai. About six o'clock in the evening we'd begin to gather at Drew's. We'd have drinks, and smoke, and possibly play cards or pool, then scatter for dinner, and come back again afterward unless one or two of us had to stay at home to write up reports, or something of that sort that had to be done.

Our gathering was a regular nightly affair. We chipped in for the drinks, and considered that our company paid Drew for the use of his house and servants. There is no doubt it did. When there are no other White men but a Spaniard who has "gone native" within thirty miles, four men who will come to one's house night after night are godsend.

We made a regular society circle. Because the heat and sun rendered us irritable, we were nearly always polite. We knew each other far too well to need to stand on ceremony anywhere else; but with the sun broiling out our brains all day, the hot calm for an hour after sunset until the sea breeze came, and Molokai across the way, we had to be careful.

You don't know how irritable a man can be until you've ridden about for hours in a hot sun that threatens to fry your brains inside your skull, then gone to an office and labored over figures and reports, and above all, striven with the stupidity of natives. Mental work in hot climates is damnable.

We were polite until the sea breeze came. When the palms began to sigh—they always got the breeze a little before we did—we would sigh, too, with relief, and relax. The best stories and the keenest talk always came after the sea breeze set in.

We never mentioned the horror across the way. Before sundown we could see it plainly, and after dark we could still see the twinkle of the lights, but we never spoke of it. Perhaps that was why it rode our nerves so badly.

Drew was more inclined to overdo the drinking than the rest of us. I think that was because his house was nearest the beach and he had to see more of Molokai than we did.

It did get on his nerves badly. The doctors say leprosy is found among people who eat fish, particularly raw fish. Drew, after he heard that, would not eat fish at all. He had been through the settlement twice, and it had gripped his imagination.

I remember one time we were all sitting on his veranda, sipping our drinks and waiting for the breeze. The sun had just set, and dusk was not yet over. The boat had been tied up at the wharf at Molokai all the afternoon, and we saw a white plume of steam shoot up. The whistle was being blown.

The sound did not reach us because of the distance, but we saw the boat swing away from the wharf, begin to forge ahead, and then she steamed off. We did not speak, but presently I heard Drew whisper to himself in an unconsciously horrified fashion:

"There are people being left behind there to become things!"

I glanced sharply at him. He was staring across the water with a fascinated gaze. As I looked, he jerked his eyes away. Stealthily, he reached out his finger and touched the lighted tip of his cigarette lying on the table by his hand.

What for?

It was a sign of blue funk. The first, absolutely the first symptom of leprosy is anesthesia at the tips of the fingers and toes—loss of sensation in the finger-tips. Drew, with no cause but panic, was testing his sensation.

After anesthesia comes a tiny whitening or silvering of the skin at the tips of the fingers, and then the darkening of a band of skin across the forehead. That last gives a peculiar expression to a face. It's called the leonine look, I believe.

When I saw Drew deliberately burn his finger with his cigarette to assure himself that he was absolutely safe, I had a moment of fright. I waited until the others had left and hinted that he'd better take a vacation. He said he would. He admitted that he needed it, but he did not. Instead, he began to make love to Maria.

Maria was the daughter of Don José.

It's odd how some forms cling to one. This man had married a native woman, lived in a native hut, though he seemed to have plenty of money, and dressed almost like a native, yet he still trimmed his beard in a jaunty imperial and still expected to be given the courtesy of a don.

We gave it to him. He had been a gentleman. Maria showed his blood in her carriage.

She hardly looked like a hapa-haole—a half-breed. Her skin was dark, but no darker than many a Spanish señora of the greatest pretensions to blue blood. Her hair was black, but it was a fine, delicately spun hair that hung in soft masses instead of the coarse bunches of the wholly native girls.

We white men left her alone. One does not marry a hapa-haole girl in Hawaii if one can help it. As they are often startlingly pretty, the best plan is to avoid them, to keep the temptation away, unless they are of the sort that one needn't marry.

Maria was distinctly not of this last class. Her father had been a gentleman, and Maria was a lady. You saw it instantly, the way she walked, the way she moved her hands, in the very inflection of her voice. Drew should have left her alone. As I said, one does not marry hapa-haole, and Maria was too fine to regard as less than a girl to marry.

It may be that I put the objection to marriage with Maria too strongly. White men may marry hapa-haoles; they have done so, and they do it even now; but it is horribly uncomfortable for every one concerned. Of course, if one loves the girl enough it's another matter; but a commonplace romance would not last the ostracism of the wholly white people, and a gentleman would hardly care to make the average hapa-haole society his own.

I dare say Drew loved Maria in his way. She was the daintiest, dearest little creature you ever saw when she was fifteen. I hadn't seen much of her after she came back from school, however.

Did I mention that her father seemed to have what even we whites would have considered plenty of money? I don't believe I saw Maria on more than half a dozen occasions between the time she was fifteen, when she used to swim with the native children, until the last time any one saw her, which I'm going to tell you about.

Her love for Drew must have been a quick, hot-blooded passion, sprung up in a moment and complete within the hour. Sometimes we hear about love at first sight. That's absurd, of course. But love may burst through the barrier of ignorance in an instant.

Maria had been seeing Drew at intervals for months. His work brought him into closer contact with her father than that of any of the rest of us. He must have seen Maria and talked idly with her as he did with any number of native girls. She must have been talking with him as she would chat with any of us, quite ignorant of emotion lying in wait. And then in an instant—

You can't conceive of the full tide of passion until you've seen no women that you consider as other than natives for months, and then suddenly realize that you love one of them. It's amazing and almost unbelievable, the overpowering longing that comes over one.

It came to me once. Luckily for both the girl and myself, I was transferred from that station almost as soon as I found I loved her. Drew had no such luck.

What I am telling you I learned later. They met under the tall palms by the beach, where it jutted out and formed a small peninsula. They would sit side by side, with the waves breaking before them, the long palm fronds above them moving back and forth in mysterious fashion, stirred by the sea breeze. Behind them all was mystery and shadow. They talked of love.

Of course it was all very improper, but what would you have done? Consider Maria's position, the only girl of her kind. The native young men were far beneath her, the rest of us avoided her for her own good as well as our own, and when one of the only men she could possibly consider as a companion of any sort showed interest in her, what could she do? Have him come to her home?

You do not know what a native hut is like. Maria lived in one. I will not go into details, but I assure you that for the reception of a European making a social call upon a young lady, they leave many things to be desired.

So Maria met Drew out on the peninsula. They talked. They loved. The waves broke at their feet; the palms rustled overhead. There was darkness and mystery behind them—and they were in love.

If Don José had not been a European, the thing might have been arranged. If Maria had not been a lady the thing might still have been arranged. If Drew had been decent, there would never have been any difficulty.

Natives do not gossip—if orders are given with sufficient authority. I repeat that the whole thing could have been settled in some way if any of three things had not been; that Don José was a European, and had been a gentleman; that Maria was a lady, and that Drew was a cad. He proved this last conclusively when Maria made a discovery and told him of it. He broke with her immediately, instead of seeing her through her difficulty.

Drew's absences while his affair with Maria had been going on had pretty thoroughly disorganized things. We gathered at night as usual, but felt vaguely uncomfortable because one of us was missing. The talk was fragmentary, unsatisfying. Then Drew broke with Maria and came back to us.

The first night he rejoined us after the break was not a propitious one for the complete restoration of the old order of things. A storm was forming somewhere, and the electric tension in the air intensified our normal weariness at the end of a day.

Because of the storm, wherever it was, the sea breeze failed us. We sat on Drew's veranda, sipping our lukewarm drinks, sweating, waiting for the breeze that never came, and listening to the damp flopping of an occasional palm-frond.

We were silent because experience had taught us to keep our mouths shut at times like this. Anything might result in a quarrel. With nothing whatever to annoy us, and simply because of the atmosphere, we felt anger stirring. The stillness, every man holding himself in check, fighting against a peevishness he knew came from sheer nervous strain, was an irritation in itself.

Suddenly Drew slammed his fist down on the table. His quarrel with Maria must have upset him badly, and the hot, still, electric air had completed the job.

"Damn it," he cried sharply, his voice a trifle thin, "I can't stand this! It's—"

In an irritated and peevish chorus we spoke to him adjuring him to shut up. We were all on edge. The whining discontent of his voice provoked me. Heat does unholy things to a man's nerves.

A native boy ran up to the steps with a note. Drew took it and crumpled it in his hand while he stared fretfully at us for a moment. The interruption had in a measure relieved the tension, however, and we relapsed into silence.

Drew read the note and his face went white. "Listen," he said.

"DEAR SEÑOR DREW:

"My daughter Maria is dead. Will you please come to me? I need some one of my own race near. If one of two of the other gentlemen will come, too, please have them do so.

"I dare ask this for the friendship I have received from all of them. I am heartbroken. Please come quickly.

"JOSÉ FELIPE GOMEZ."

Drew stared at us. Even in the lamp-light we could see the ghastly expression on his face. In fretful silence we rose, and all five of us plodded distastefully down the road toward Don José's hut.

He was waiting for us before the door. When we came he shook hands with each of us in turn and led the way inside. He had put candles about a sort of pallet in the center of the room, on which was an object covered with a cloth.

"My daughter," said Don José, with an air of calm grief, indicating the bier.

Drew hesitatingly asked how she had come to die.

"She stabbed herself," said Don José, looking quietly at Drew.

Drew blanched even whiter, and began to pick at his nails furtively. Something in the stealthiness of his movements reminded me of the time I had seen him burn himself with his cigarette.

That had been in a rush of causeless fright about Molokai. He seemed to have forgotten Molokai since then. It weighed on the minds of the rest of us just as before, but still, according to our tacit etiquette, we never spoke of it.

Don José drew out a small piece of paper.

"I wish to read you," he said in a rather hard voice, "her last message to me."

He read. Maria had written in a weary strain that she had loved too well; that disgrace was coming upon her; that she had died rather than cause her father dishonor.

"Dishonor!" said Don José, and smiled very bitterly. For the first time I wondered what his story was.

I could not see, at first, the object in his telling us what Maria had said of publishing her disgrace; but then I understood. Drew looked utterly crushed and absolutely ghastly—

"I know," said Don José, "that Maria would never have loved one of the Hawaiians. It must have been one of you gentlemen."

He knew, of course, that it was Drew. We waited for him to kill Drew. In our mental state it would have seemed the logical thing to do, and none of us would have tried to stop him.

Don José went on:

"For the benefit of that gentleman I have something to say; something that Maria herself did not know. Some time ago I made a discovery which I had not yet broken to her. I considered my duty, however, and communicated with the proper persons."

Don José stood there, quiet and well-mannered, and in eight words he took his revenge for the death of Maria:

"My daughter was to go to Molokai to-morrow."

He lifted the cloth that covered the bier and raised one of the hands underneath. The tips of the fingers were just beginning to show silvery, like the scales of a fish.

Wasn't that a perfect revenge? Don José had put ashes on Maria's finger-tips to whiten them. No, of course Maria wasn't a leper. Don José explained the whole thing to me the day after Drew went mad from fear.

THE FULL PROJECT GUTENBERG™ LICENSE

PLEASE READ THIS BEFORE YOU DISTRIBUTE OR USE THIS WORK

To protect the Project Gutenberg™ mission of promoting the free distribution of electronic works, by using or distributing this work (or any other work associated in any way with the phrase “Project Gutenberg”), you agree to comply with all the terms of the Full Project Gutenberg License available with this file or online at www.gutenberg.org/license.

Section 1. General Terms of Use and Redistributing Project Gutenberg electronic works

1.A. By reading or using any part of this Project Gutenberg electronic work, you indicate that you have read, understand, agree to and accept all the terms of this license and intellectual property (trademark/copyright) agreement. If you do not agree to abide by all the terms of this agreement, you must cease using and return or destroy all copies of Project Gutenberg electronic works in your possession. If you paid a fee for obtaining a copy of or access to a Project Gutenberg electronic work and you do not agree to be bound by the terms of this agreement, you may obtain a refund from the person or entity to whom you paid the fee as set forth in paragraph 1.E.8.

1.B. “Project Gutenberg” is a registered trademark. It may only be used on or associated in any way with an electronic work by people who agree to be bound by the terms of this agreement. There are a few things that you can do with most Project Gutenberg electronic works even without complying with the full terms of this agreement. See paragraph 1.C below. There are a lot of things you can do with Project Gutenberg electronic works if you follow the terms of this agreement and help preserve free future access to Project Gutenberg electronic works. See paragraph 1.E below.

1.C. The Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation (“the Foundation” or PGLAF), owns a compilation copyright in the collection of Project Gutenberg electronic works. Nearly all the individual works in the collection are in the public domain in the United States. If an individual work is unprotected by copyright law in the United States and you are located in the United States, we do not claim a right to prevent you from copying, distributing, performing, displaying or creating derivative works based on the work as long as all references to Project Gutenberg are removed. Of course, we hope that you will support the Project Gutenberg mission of promoting free access to electronic works by freely sharing Project Gutenberg works in compliance with the terms of this agreement for keeping the Project Gutenberg name associated with the work. You can easily comply with the terms of this agreement by keeping this work in the same format with its attached full Project Gutenberg License when you share it without charge with others.

1.D. The copyright laws of the place where you are located also govern what you can do with this work. Copyright laws in most countries are in a constant state of change. If you are outside the United States, check the laws of your country in addition to the terms of this agreement before downloading, copying, displaying, performing, distributing or creating derivative works based on this work or any other Project Gutenberg work. The Foundation makes no representations concerning the copyright status of any work in any country other than the United States.

1.E. Unless you have removed all references to Project Gutenberg:

1.E.1. The following sentence, with active links to, or other immediate access to, the full Project Gutenberg License must appear prominently whenever any copy of a Project Gutenberg work (any work on which the phrase “Project Gutenberg” appears, or with which the phrase “Project Gutenberg” is associated) is accessed, displayed, performed, viewed, copied or distributed:

This eBook is for the use of anyone anywhere in the United States and most other parts of the world at no cost and with almost no restrictions whatsoever. You may copy it, give it away or re-use it under the terms of the Project Gutenberg™ License included with this eBook or online at www.gutenberg.org. If you are not located in the United States, you will have to check the laws of the country where you are located before using this eBook.

1.E.2. If an individual Project Gutenberg electronic work is derived from texts not protected by U.S. copyright law (does not contain a notice indicating that it is posted with permission of the copyright holder), the work can be copied and distributed to anyone in the United States without paying any fees or charges. If you are redistributing or providing access to a work with the phrase “Project Gutenberg” associated with or appearing on the work, you must comply either with the requirements of paragraphs 1.E.1 through 1.E.7 or obtain permission for the use of the work and the Project Gutenberg trademark as set forth in paragraphs 1.E.8 or 1.E.9.

1.E.3. If an individual Project Gutenberg electronic work is posted with the permission of the copyright holder, your use and distribution must comply with both paragraphs 1.E.1 through 1.E.7 and any additional terms imposed by the copyright holder. Additional terms will be linked to the Project Gutenberg License for all works posted with the permission of the copyright holder found at the beginning of this work.

1.E.4. Do not unlink or detach or remove the full Project Gutenberg License terms from this work, or any files containing a part of this work or any other work associated with Project Gutenberg.

1.E.5. Do not copy, display, perform, distribute or redistribute this electronic work, or any part of this electronic work, without prominently displaying the sentence set forth in paragraph 1.E.1 with active links or immediate access to the full terms of the Project Gutenberg License.

1.E.6. You may convert to and distribute this work in any binary, compressed, marked up, nonproprietary or proprietary form, including any word processing or hypertext form. However, if you provide access to or distribute copies of a Project Gutenberg work in a format other than “Plain Vanilla ASCII” or other format used in the official version posted on the official Project Gutenberg website (www.gutenberg.org), you must, at no additional cost, fee or expense to the user, provide a copy, a means of exporting a copy, or a means of obtaining a copy upon request, of the work in its original “Plain Vanilla ASCII” or other form. Any alternate format must include the full Project Gutenberg License as specified in paragraph 1.E.1.

1.E.7. Do not charge a fee for access to, viewing, displaying, performing, copying or distributing any Project Gutenberg works unless you comply with paragraph 1.E.8 or 1.E.9.

1.E.8. You may charge a reasonable fee for copies of or providing access to or distributing Project Gutenberg electronic works provided that:

- You pay a royalty fee of 20% of the gross profits you derive from the use of Project Gutenberg works calculated using the method you already use to calculate your applicable taxes. The fee is owed to the owner of the Project Gutenberg trademark, but he has agreed to donate royalties under this paragraph to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation. Royalty payments must be paid within 60 days following each date on which you prepare (or are legally required to prepare) your periodic tax returns. Royalty payments should be clearly marked as such and sent to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation at the address specified in Section 4, "Information about donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation."
- You provide a full refund of any money paid by a user who notifies you in writing (or by e-mail) within 30 days of receipt that s/he does not agree to the terms of the full Project Gutenberg™ License. You must require such a user to return or destroy all copies of the works possessed in a physical medium and discontinue all use of and all access to other copies of Project Gutenberg™ works.
- You provide, in accordance with paragraph 1.F.3, a full refund of any money paid for a work or a replacement copy, if a defect in the electronic work is discovered and reported to you within 90 days of receipt of the work.
- You comply with all other terms of this agreement for free distribution of Project Gutenberg™ works.

1.E.9. If you wish to charge a fee or distribute a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work or group of works on different terms than are set forth in this agreement, you must obtain permission in writing from the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, the manager of the Project

Gutenberg™ trademark. Contact the Foundation as set forth in Section 3 below.

1.F.

1.F.1. Project Gutenberg volunteers and employees expend considerable effort to identify, do copyright research on, transcribe and proofread works not protected by U.S. copyright law in creating the Project Gutenberg™ collection. Despite these efforts, Project Gutenberg™ electronic works, and the medium on which they may be stored, may contain “Defects,” such as, but not limited to, incomplete, inaccurate or corrupt data, transcription errors, a copyright or other intellectual property infringement, a defective or damaged disk or other medium, a computer virus, or computer codes that damage or cannot be read by your equipment.

1.F.2. LIMITED WARRANTY, DISCLAIMER OF DAMAGES - Except for the “Right of Replacement or Refund” described in paragraph 1.F.3, the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, the owner of the Project Gutenberg™ trademark, and any other party distributing a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work under this agreement, disclaim all liability to you for damages, costs and expenses, including legal fees. YOU AGREE THAT YOU HAVE NO REMEDIES FOR NEGLIGENCE, STRICT LIABILITY, BREACH OF WARRANTY OR BREACH OF CONTRACT EXCEPT THOSE PROVIDED IN PARAGRAPH 1.F.3. YOU AGREE THAT THE FOUNDATION, THE TRADEMARK OWNER, AND ANY DISTRIBUTOR UNDER THIS AGREEMENT WILL NOT BE LIABLE TO YOU FOR ACTUAL, DIRECT, INDIRECT, CONSEQUENTIAL, PUNITIVE OR INCIDENTAL DAMAGES EVEN IF YOU GIVE NOTICE OF THE POSSIBILITY OF SUCH DAMAGE.

1.F.3. LIMITED RIGHT OF REPLACEMENT OR REFUND - If you discover a defect in this electronic work within 90 days of receiving it, you can receive a refund of the money (if any) you paid for it by sending a written explanation to the person you received the work from. If you received the work on a physical medium, you must return the medium with your written explanation. The person or entity that provided you with the defective work may elect to provide a replacement copy in lieu of a refund. If you received the work electronically, the person or entity providing it to you may choose to give you a second opportunity to receive the work electronically in lieu of a refund. If the second copy is also defective, you may demand a refund in writing without further opportunities to fix the problem.

1.F.4. Except for the limited right of replacement or refund set forth in paragraph 1.F.3, this work is provided to you 'AS-IS', WITH NO OTHER WARRANTIES OF ANY KIND, EXPRESS OR IMPLIED, INCLUDING BUT NOT LIMITED TO WARRANTIES OF MERCHANTABILITY OR FITNESS FOR ANY PURPOSE.

1.F.5. Some states do not allow disclaimers of certain implied warranties or the exclusion or limitation of certain types of damages. If any disclaimer or limitation set forth in this agreement violates the law of the state applicable to this agreement, the agreement shall be interpreted to make the maximum disclaimer or limitation permitted by the applicable state law. The invalidity or unenforceability of any provision of this agreement shall not void the remaining provisions.

1.F.6. INDEMNITY - You agree to indemnify and hold the Foundation, the trademark owner, any agent or employee of the Foundation, anyone providing copies of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works in accordance with this agreement, and any volunteers associated with the production, promotion and distribution of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works, harmless from all liability, costs and expenses, including legal fees, that arise directly or indirectly from any of the following which you do or cause to occur: (a) distribution of this or any Project Gutenberg work, (b) alteration, modification, or additions or deletions to any Project Gutenberg work, and (c) any Defect you cause.

Section 2. Information about the Mission of Project Gutenberg

Project Gutenberg is synonymous with the free distribution of electronic works in formats readable by the widest variety of computers including obsolete, old, middle-aged and new computers. It exists because of the efforts of hundreds of volunteers and donations from people in all walks of life.

Volunteers and financial support to provide volunteers with the assistance they need are critical to reaching Project Gutenberg's goals and ensuring that the Project Gutenberg collection will remain freely available for generations to come. In 2001, the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation was created to provide a secure and permanent future for Project Gutenberg and future generations. To learn more about the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation and how your efforts and donations can help, see Sections 3 and 4 and the Foundation information page at www.gutenberg.org.

Section 3. Information about the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation

The Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation is a non-profit 501(c)(3) educational corporation organized under the laws of the state of Mississippi and granted tax exempt status by the Internal Revenue Service. The Foundation's EIN or federal tax identification number is 64-6221541. Contributions to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation are tax deductible to the full extent permitted by U.S. federal laws and your state's laws.

The Foundation's business office is located at 41 Watchung Plaza #516, Montclair NJ 07042, USA, +1 (862) 621-9288. Email contact links and up to date contact information can be found at the Foundation's website and official page at www.gutenberg.org/contact

Section 4. Information about Donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation

Project Gutenberg™ depends upon and cannot survive without widespread public support and donations to carry out its mission of increasing the number of public domain and licensed works that can be freely distributed in machine-readable form accessible by the widest array of equipment including outdated equipment. Many small donations ($1 to $5,000) are particularly important to maintaining tax exempt status with the IRS.

The Foundation is committed to complying with the laws regulating charities and charitable donations in all 50 states of the United States. Compliance requirements are not uniform and it takes a considerable effort, much paperwork and many fees to meet and keep up with these requirements. We do not solicit donations in locations where we have not received written confirmation of compliance. To SEND DONATIONS or determine the status of compliance for any particular state visit www.gutenberg.org/donate.

While we cannot and do not solicit contributions from states where we have not met the solicitation requirements, we know of no prohibition against accepting unsolicited donations from donors in such states who approach us with offers to donate.

International donations are gratefully accepted, but we cannot make any statements concerning tax treatment of donations received from outside the United States. U.S. laws alone swamp our small staff.

Please check the Project Gutenberg web pages for current donation methods and addresses. Donations are accepted in a number of other ways including checks, online payments and credit card donations. To donate, please visit: www.gutenberg.org/donate.

Section 5. General Information About Project Gutenberg electronic works

Professor Michael S. Hart was the originator of the Project Gutenberg concept of a library of electronic works that could be freely shared with anyone. For forty years, he produced and distributed Project Gutenberg eBooks with only a loose network of volunteer support.

Project Gutenberg eBooks are often created from several printed editions, all of which are confirmed as not protected by copyright in the U.S. unless a copyright notice is included. Thus, we do not necessarily keep eBooks in compliance with any particular paper edition.

Most people start at our website which has the main PG search facility:
www.gutenberg.org.

This website includes information about Project Gutenberg, including how to make donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, how to help produce our new eBooks, and how to subscribe to our email newsletter to hear about new eBooks.
