NO WONDER

by W. C. Tuttle

Author of "Helped by a Horse Doctor,"
"When the Pilgrims Hit piperock," etc.

I reckon it's a fact that the United States is the melting-pot for the world. She takes 'em in, melts 'em to a certain point and then pours out everything from scientists to sheep-herders. What comes in between them two high-minded occupations I dunno, 'cause we only gets the two kinds out here.

Honest to grandma, we do get some queer pelicans out in the boundless West. Seems like every scientist from the plain ordinary bug-hunter to some high-minded, red-sealed, hammer-peaking hombre, who looketh for the antiquated framework of a dippydocus or pack-o'-durham, comes to our Piperock cabin, looking for advice, guidance or just to interrupt the peaceful existence of me and that long, lean suffering hunk of humanity—"Magpie" Simpkins.

We've helped 'em hunt for everything from the effects of sheep upon the human mind to why the coyote howls at the moon—and made good. That is, we're still alive. I can stand for science, but when I looks upon the fat, pink face of Reginald Alfred Jackson Hilton I know that somebody has swiped the silver lining off our cloud. Yes, he introduced himself by all them names, and Magpie wrote it all down on our cabin door for fear we'd misplace it and not know how to call him in when it rained.

Reginald needed somebody to do his thinking for him, except when it comes to thinking about Violet. Yeah, he could think about her—to a certain point. Violet's other name was Robertson-Clark.

Seems that Violet's ma was so stuck on the family name that when she married Clark she just hooked Robertson on behind and led it through life. Reginald tells us that Violet thinks of him all the time, but if Violet is much good mentally she don't have to waste much of her brain to do that.

Reginald was about as much use as a .22 cartridge in a eight-gage shotgun. I don't know why we let him stop with us. I voted to tie a can on his big, hammerheaded mule and point the outfit towards Canada, but Magpie just looks at Reginald, sort of awed-like and takes off his hat. It don't even faze Reginald when Magpie says, "Yes, ma'am" to him.

"I wish to stay," says Reginald, and the son-of-a-gun did stay.

He wasn't neither useful nor ornamental. Said his pa owned a railroad. Pa opines that Reginald ain't much use, as he is, so Reginald came West to make a man of himself.

"Uh-huh," says I. "And stopped here to make —— fools of us."

"I read it in a book," says he.

"By Barnum?" I asks.

"I expect so. Anyway it was by a good writer, re'lly. Told about a fellow who got in bad at home. He came out West and got to be foreman of a cattle-farm, or foreman of a mine, or foreman of a lumber-mill or——"

"Herded sheep," adds Magpie.

"I expect so. Turned out to be a wonder, re'lly."

"He would," agrees Magpie, "More shepherds turns out to be wonders than any other race on earth."

"I'll stay," says Reginald, "and maybe I'll turn out to be a wonder some day."

"The sheep need you," says I.

Reginald didn't look like a person who would turn out to be a wonder, especially our first look at him, setting on the ground in front of our cabin door. We steps out there and looks at him and his mule.

“Seven,” says he.

“Seven what?” I asks.

“Times. That quadruped doesn’t want me on his back, re’lly.”

The Lord only knows where Reginald picked up his wardrobe, but it wasn’t west of Chicago. He’s got a green shirt with pink stripes, lavender-colored wool chaps, Baden-Powell hat and yaller boots. His belt is awful new and yaller, and in the holster reposes a .32 bulldog pistol.

Reginald is sort of fat all over, pink fat, and he’s got bat-ears. I don’t like them ears. All I’ve ever met hear everything they hadn’t ought to and makes you repeat everything they should have heard the first time.

“How did you happen to get a mule instead of a horse?” asks Magpie.

“Fellow told me that a mule could stand more than a horse. Can they?”

“Well,” says Magpie, “that mule only throwed you seven times today, which shows that a mule can stand a lot.”

That’s how Reginald Alfred Jackson Hilton came to us. I wanted to bar the door and keep him moving, but Magpie says:

“He’s worth lookin’ into, Ike. The poor kid needs guidance, and if we let him go somebody will kill him. He ain’t got brains enough to unsaddle that mule, and his blood will be upon our head if we don’t hang on to him long enough to hammer some sense into his head.”

“His blood may be on our hands,” I agrees, “and some of it upon our heads, but it’s his blood, Magpie. Better let him mosey on while our corpuscles are intact.”

“He can’t hurt nobody, Ike, even if he shot ’em with that blunt pistol. We’ll let him stay a while.”

“And get to be a wonder,” adds Reginald.

“You can’t help it,” says Magpie. “You’re a wonder now, and wonders never cease.”

“I’ll do my best, re’lly. I read that in a book. I love books, don’t you? Poetry and so forth.”

“And so forth,” nods Magpie.

“What have you read?”

“Undershirt.”

Reginald studies this for a while, and then says—

“Are you spoofing me?”

Magpie grabbed my wrist, and my bullet made a leaky spot in the cabin roof.

“Remain calm, Ike,” advises Magpie while Reginald seems to look for a place to ooze out of the cabin. “I’m danged sure I don’t know what that word means, but we can live it down.”

“All right,” says I. “Dry-nurse him if you wants to, but I ain’t even going to be a silent pardner in the affair.”

“I’ll try and raise him without help,” nods Magpie sad-like. “I’ll put him on a dynamite diet and give him injections of sheep-dip and horse-liniment twice a day. He may pull through.”

“I hope to get along,” says Reginald, looking up at that bullet-hole. “I want to amount to something.”

“You may,” grins Magpie. “It won’t be any wonder if you don’t, and you’ll be one if you do.”

“Scenery” Sims, our sheriff, who is a human periwinkle with a squeaky voice and squeaky boots, comes up to see Reginald.

“He ain’t neither game nor predatory animile,” says Scenery, “so I don’t know whether to protect him or not. You ought to brand him if you wants to keep him.”

“In the East. When I looks upon him, Magpie, I’m filled with these thoughts. The Lord made Adam and then took one of Adam’s ribs and made for him a woman, didn’t he? Well, this maverick is plumb safe from matrimony, ’cause it would take all of his ribs, back-bone, inside and outsides, from toe-nails to dandruff to make a rib for one woman. He, he, he!”

“Yet he loves a woman,” says I.

“Don’t prove nothin’,” squeaks Scenery. “I had a pet fool-hen once what thought a lot of me. It ain’t hard to love.”

“Not when you love a girl like Violet,” states Reginald.

“After lookin’ at you I’d say it ain’t,” agrees Scenery.

Magpie told Reginald he’d better put his mule in the corral or it might wander away.

“I don’t mind, re’llly,” says he. “I intend to burn my bridges behind me. Some day I’ll go home and show them what the glorious West has done for me.”

“I hope you don’t mention names,” says Magpie.

I reckon that Reginald didn’t find things just like they told about in that book.

One day “Jay Bird” Whittaker, who owns the Cross J outfit and most of the Paradise bank, rides up to our cabin and orates thusly: “In regard to that there pro-te-jay of yours, Magpie. That cross between a lulu and a loco—know whom I am speaking about?”

Magpie nods.

“Hopple the son-of-a-gun! He’s expressed a wish to be foreman of the Cross J. Uh-huh. Accepted without mercy.”

“Hire him?” grins Magpie.

“‘Telescope’ Tolliver kissed him.”

“My ——! What did he do, Jay Bird?”

“Thanked Telescope. Yessir, he did. Telescope took a liking to him and made him a present of a gray bronc and——”

“Now that wasn’t no way to do,” complains Magpie. “Likely gave him that ‘Weaver’ bronc, eh? Where’s the remains?”

“Lemme finish, can’t yuh? The Weaver throwed him over the corral fence and never broke a pole. I brought the funny jigger over in my buckboard, and the last I seen of him he was up in Ricky’s barber-shop tryin’ to find out if there’s a vacancy in the Forest Service in Death Valley. Pete Gonyer told him there was.”

“Ike, will you go and get him?” asks Magpie, “I mean, ‘bring him,’ Ike—not ‘get him.’”

“I will not,” says I, shoving my gun back into the holster. “I starts on a labor of love and you throws a bomb into my motive power. Go herd your own lambs.”

Reginald ain’t got much sense, but he’s got sort of an animal instinct which sends him home at meal-time. Magpie is cooking supper when he shows up. Reginald acts sort of melancholy and after while he says—

“Year?” grunts Magpie. “Where you been all the time?”

“West.”

“West of what?”

“Well—er—New York. When I think of it my head gets in a whirl, re’lly it does. I don’t know what to do.”

“Spoonful of sody in warm water,” says I. “You’ve got gas pains.”

“Perhaps,” says he sad-like. “You see, it was like this: I met a man from Silver Bend in New York, who wanted me to come West. I started out and I got as far as Boston, and I stayed there and wrote letters and sent them to this man at Silver Bend to post for me. Wasn’t it rather clever of me, re’lly?”

“I see that you ain’t to be trusted,” says Magpie. “You have deceived them what believed in you.”

“Well, they—er—re’lly, they dud-didn’t believe in me—much. That’s why I came West to do big things. Oh I have tried. Today I tried to be foreman of the Cross J cattle-farm, but—I must do something very soon. Re’lly the outlook is dreary, and I have only two more days.”

“Internal combustion or has somebody promised to kill you?” I asks.

“I wrote to them,” says he tearful-like. “I got that book I told you about and I had a lot of things happen to me like they did to the feller in that book. I—I shu-shot a outlaw and I got to be foreman of the ranch and I——”

“Saved the girl,” adds Magpie, but Reginald shakes his head, sad-like.

“No—not yet. The girl is Violet.”

“The story ain’t finished yet, eh?”

“Two more days,” wails Reginald. “Two more days. How can I make good?”

“Two more days for what?” asks Magpie.

“I got a letter today. Violet is coming out here. She eloped alone to come and marry me. She says I’m her hero. She’ll get in Paradise tomorrow and then she’ll take the stage for here next morning. Tells me to be there to meet her.”

Reginald wipes the tears off his nose and sniffles real hard.

“But I won’t be there,” says he. “I can’t meet her. I ain’t no hero!”

“No,” says Magpie, with his mouth full of hot beans, “you sure as —— ain’t.”

“Come and eat something and maybe you’ll feel better,” says I.

“Eat? I can’t eat—I’ve got to think!”

“Well, as long as you’ve got to—do the best you can,” says I. “But grub on your stummick ain’t going to hurt your brains none to speak about.”

“If we only had some fish,” says Magpie serious-like. “Fish is brain food.”

“I used to eat a lot of fish,” sighs Reginald.

“Another theory busted,” grunts Magpie, and then sets there and lets his meal grow cold while he seems to think deep.

I know the symptoms. Magpie’s got an idea and is weighing every angle of it. Magpie never put his ideas into words until they’re all figured out to the sharp end of nothing whittled to a point. They’ve got to be perfectly legitimate, plausible, et cetera, and then they won’t work a-tall.

At times he squints at Reginald and then he turns his eyes towards me and all the time he’s fingering his long mustache. After while he puts some gravy in his coffee and pours some sugar over his potatoes.

“Two more days,” says Reginald sad-like. “You see, I’m her hero.”

After while Magpie rolls a cigaret and leans back from the table.

“They say that heroes are born—not made, but we’re going to prove that they’re all wrong.”

“You go ahead and prove it,” says I. “But leave the name of Harper out of the experiment. Sabe? Right now I’m chemically pure in mind and body and I expect to retain my girlish laughter for many moons. Deal me out.”

“Ike—” Magpie sets there, squinting his long nose away from the smoke of his cigaret and staring at the ridge-pole of the cabin—“Ike, me and you are two old pelicans who has likely never felt love’s young dream and ain’t qualified to pass upon the —— foolishness of such a condition. Love only comes once, they say, and that is in the Spring of a man’s existence.

“Two hearts which beat as one—as the poet says, and the poets ought to know.

“Here is a chance to make love’s young dream come true. Violet is looking for a hero. She can’t see nothin’ but a hero. Yonder sets the hero. Me and you know —— well he ain’t heroic, Ike, but we don’t count.”

“Take time, Ike, and maybe by that time we’ll have shipped ’em East. Sabe? No matter how he falls down in the East—he’ll be a hero here. We’ll make him look like one, anyway.”

“Lay down your hand,” says I. “You ain’t showed a pair yet.”

“Violet comes to Paradise tomorrow and comes here the next day on the stage. Reginald is going to be in Paradise in time to come back on the stage with her. Reginald is going to have a gun full of blank shells. When the stage hits Wind River crossing there’s going to be a hold-up. Sabe? Two men are going to step out and stick up that stage.

“They’re going to order the passengers out. Reginald is going to come out. He’s going to pull his gun before he gets out, because it takes him too long otherwise. He’s going to come out of that stage spoutin’ smoke and gun-wads, and me and you, Ike, are going to turn a flip-flop into the brush and beat it. Get the idea? He’ll be a hero.”

Reginald takes it all in with his mouth open wide. Then he swallows hard and says—

“Don’t I capture neither one of you?”

“You —— fool! What do you want?” howls Magpie. “Want us to get twenty years in the penitentiary?”

“Oh,” says Reginald, thinking it over. And then he says, “I—I’ve told them I was a dead shot.”

“The danged fool wants to kill one of us!” says I. “Of all the blamed nerve I ever heard about, he’s got it all.”

“You don’t kill nor capture anybody,” says Magpie. “All you do is to chase us away, save the girl and the money.”

“Well,” says Reginald, “well, I’m obliged to you, I’m sure. Wouldn’t it be better if I just happened to ride up on a horse and shoot at you? Make it more like the feller did in that book.”

“—— your book!” snaps Magpie. “This is real life.”

“With a touch of death,” says I. “Art Miller will likely get loco and spray us both with buckshot.”

“Naw he won’t,” argues Magpie. “I know Art too well. He’ll stick his hands right up and he’ll likely hold ’em up until we’re a mile away. Maybe we’d better have Reginald tell him when to take his hands down.”

“I’ll try to remember it,” agrees Reginald. “Why will he have his hands up?”

“There are times in my life when I’m a—a——”

Magpie reaches over and picks up his dictionary and peruses it a while.

“There are times in my life when I’m a—a potential murderer.”

“Yes,” says I. “And the rest of the time you’re a —— fool, Magpie. We ought to let that unsuspectin’ female come out here and see Reginald as he is.”

“Yes, Ike, that would be your way of doing it, but I—I’m crazy, I reckon; but I can’t help wanting to start ’em out right. She’ll find out soon enough that her Reginald ain’t no hero.”

“I’ll do my best,” says Reginald. “But you ain’t told me yet what he’ll have his hands in the air for?”

“Prayin’,” explains Magpie, “for lightning to strike you.”

“It don’t look like rain,” says Reginald.

Magpie raises up and sets on both of his hands. I do the same thing. It’s a good thing to do when you’ve got a perfectly good gun hangin’ on to you and a overwhelming desire to use it. Sort of gives you something to do with your hands.

“I don’t know why you ever came out here,” says Magpie. “Why didn’t you stay in Boston?”

“The man who was sending my letters moved away and I had to come. Didn’t know anybody else to take it up with. I wish I had known you before.”

“I’d ’a’ moved too,” says Magpie.

Well, the next day we pulled the stingers out of some cartridges and loaded Reginald’s gun for him. It was the first time it had been loaded and he likely wondered why we put them brass things into the cylinder, but he didn’t ask. Magpie showed him how to pull the trigger.

“Might as well give him a monkey-wrench,” says I. “He’ll forget to shoot.”

“Are you spoofing me again?” asks Reginald. “There isn’t any such thing.”

“As what?” I answers.

“A monkey-ranch.”

I went outside and shot three times at a tin can. Whether I hit it or not don’t matter. Magpie watched me reload my gun and then held out his hand.

“Look at it shake, Ike. All unstrung. That’s what a feller gets for foolin’ with heroes.”

“Do they re’lly grow monkeys?” asks Reginald.

“Show him a monkey-wrench, Ike,” sobs Magpie. “I can’t. I mustn’t look at him until I gets my natural desires under control.”

I showed Reginald a monkey-wrench and tried to explain, but it was a waste of energy. I showed him how to hold it so it looks like a gun and he sort of gets the idea.

“Just as good as a gun in a hold-up,” says Magpie.

“Maybe in the East,” I admits. “But not out here.”

“Aw, shucks! I could hold up a bank with a monkey-wrench and the banker would swear I had a cannon.”

“Not here,” I argues. “Somebody’d kill you too quick.”

“Naw, they wouldn’t, Ike. It’s the power of suggestion. Know what I mean? They’d take it for granted that you had a gun in your hands. Shucks, they’d never think you was fool enough to have anything but a loaded gun.”

All me and Magpie needs is a slight difference of opinion to start a hy-iu argument, and this argument holds forth all the next day. Magpie offers his reasons why he’s right, and then I sets up and howls that he’s all wrong.

Reginald sets there and listens. Once in a while he opens his mouth to ask what it’s about. We takes him in hand and explains all about it, and then in another hour he makes another inquiry. Busting in thataway sort of keeps the argument alive, and late in the afternoon we stops and calls it a draw.

We manages to find Reginald’s mule and saddled it for him. We decides that his clothes are too prominent for a hero to wear, so we garbs him in an old shirt of Magpie’s and took away his lavender chaps. His hat don’t fit well, so I gives him an old one of mine. We explains the whole scheme to him and he understands perfectly.

He only fell off that mule once before he got out of sight down the road.

Me and Magpie don’t need to rehearse. Magpie has been a sheriff, and I know quite a lot about robberies too.

We rode out early in the morning, fixed our masks and got all ready to be foiled by our hero. We aimed to pull it off right at the bank of the river as the driver pulls for the deluge.

Art Miller was plumb docile and likely wished his arms were twenty feet longer. He looked into the sky while he hooked one foot under the express box and up-ended it over a front wheel. I opens the door.

“Everybody outside!” says I.

Comes a squeak, and out comes a little fat harness-drummer. He almost swallers his tongue when he sees me.

“The rest of you come out!” I ordered hoarse-like; but the rest don’t come out, ’cause there ain’t no rest.

“Get ’em all out!” croaks Magpie.

Just then I hears a noise and I looks down the road. Right into us comes a big mule, running like a deer, and on that mule’s neck is Reginald, hanging to the head-stall with one hand while he reaches back and grasps the horn with the other. I grabbed that drummer and slammed him back into the stage and then threw myself backwards.

I seen the mule swing wide enough to miss the stage, but it whanged into the near wheeler on that team, played a billiard on a leader and then shot into the air and halfway across the river before it hit the wet.

That stage four went into their collars, and I seen Art Miller go over backwards on top of the stage with his arms still pointed at the sky, and into that river went them four horses, scared stiff, the stage and the driver, bent-for-election, follering the lead of the locoed mule and our hero.

I crawls out of the brush and just then I sees Magpie coming up the bank. He’s wet all over, but his mask is still on.

“What was the matter with that —— fool?” he asks. “Mule knocked me plumb into the river.”

“If you was speaking of our hero,” says I, “it’s going to take about seven doctors and a couple of lawyers to answer your question.”

“We’ve got to catch that stage, Ike!” yelps Magpie. “Lines dragging and no way to stop ’em.”

We ducks over to our horses, lands into the saddles and just hits the road in time to feel perfectly sure that somebody is shooting at us. Some hunks of lead eases past us, one of which cuts a rosette off my chaps. Looking back, we behold a couple of men, riding fast, and they appear to be throwing lead with both hands.

“—— the stuff that heroes are made of!” says I, and starts riding.

It was some procession while it lasted.

We hit Calamity grade at forty miles an hour where the road is only wide enough for one rig at a time, and right there we catches the stage. We came around a turn, jumping high and handsome and slap bang into that passenger vehicle.

I gets a passing glimpse which seems to inform me that one wheel has met a rock, the same of which puts the outfit out of the race, and then my horse and Magpie's hit together, trying to go around the edge of the grade, and we went over the edge. It was about eighty feet to the river. I think I got there first, but it's a question.

We hit a deep place which was plumb lucky for us. I went down and got a handful of rocks and am just coming up when somebody comes down to get me.

We went back to the bottom and then came back to the top. I blows the alkali water out of my nose and gazes into the features of the man who came down after me.

It was our sheriff—Scenery Sims. He ain't even got a squeak left. I throws him out on the bank and then looks across the pool at Magpie, who is setting on a rock, combing his mustache.

“Where—did this come from?” I asks, pointing at Scenery.

“Even as you and I,” splutters Magpie, looking back towards the grade.

“He's after us, I reckon.”

Just then a bullet hit the water beside Magpie and another whines off a rock beside me. I lopes off down the river to a riffle where I splashes across and joins Magpie.

“Where's our broncs?” I asks.

“Gone hence, Ike. Don’t reckon they even got scratched. Let’s get a-goin’.”

“If I ever get my hands on that —— fool on that gray mule——” says I.

“Self-preservation first, Ike. Somebody must ’a’ knowed about that hold-up. Dang these high boots full of water!”

“Next time I monkeys with heroes, Magpie——”

“Aw, forget Reginald. I hope Scenery didn’t suffer any bad effects. Did he wake up enough to recognize us?”

“If you ’a’ let me tie a can on that —— mule in the first place——”

“Live and learn, Ike.”

“Not with you, Magpie—learn and die.”

It takes us two hours to get to our cabin. We hobbles inside and sets down on the bunk where we sets and lets our feet dangle.

“The danged thing didn’t come home, I reckon,” observes Magpie.

“Maybe the mule killed him.”

“Walking always did bring sweet thoughts to your lips, Magpie,” says I.

“I’m going down-town,” says Magpie. “I’m going to get me a big drink of——”

Just then the door opens and Scenery and Mike Pelly comes in. Scenery is sort of wet and moldy-looking, and his face looks like somebody had caressed him with a curry-comb. He looks at us and squeaks——

“Maybe you are innocent and can prove it, but I’ve got to do my duty.”

“Provin’ innocence is a tiresome chore,” opines Magpie and throws down on the both of ’em with his six-shooter.

“Unhook their guns and hog-tie ’em, Ike.”

“My suspicions are not unfounded,” squeaks Scenery. “You’re going to be worried for a long time over this day’s work. Anything you say or do can be used against yuh. If you’ll give up the five thousand you stole and promise to——”

“It is not for the sheriff to coerce a criminal,” states a voice, and there stands Judge Steele, peering over his glasses at us. “I hereby adjudicates ——”

“Set down, judge!” snaps Magpie, and the judge takes one look at that .45 and obeys. Then I hog-ties the presiding judge of Yaller Rock County.

“When I sets in judgment on you two, I will remember this,” says he.

“Tell it to the jury,” grins Magpie, and then we went outside.

“Canada or Mexico?” I asks.

“For murder, Ike. I’m going to kill a hero.”

We went down to Buck’s place and finds that Art Wheeler is the center of attraction. I tries to back Magpie out of there, but Art sees us and yells:

“Who-ee! You ought to ’a’ seen it, Magpie. Seven of ’em with Winchesters. Four .45-70’s and three .30-30’s lined up on me. I kicked an empty express box off among ’em, slammed the rawhide into my four broncs and saved the day.”

“Huh!” grunts Magpie. “Say yuh did? What day, Art?”

“Today. Down at Wind River crossin’. By grab, I showed them bad men a trick or two. Five .45-90’s and two——”

“Recognize any of them?” I asks.

“Not exactly, but I think the leader was ‘Black’ Anderson, Ike. ’Course he had a mask on, but he had a big black beard and would weigh over two hundred. All of ’em had two six-guns and every one had a rifle. Three .40-82’s and——”

“Didn’t they? Say, you betcha they did. I’m foggin’ along Calamity when all to once I seen that they was gainin’ fast, so I uses my head. I hooks a front wheel around a boulder, which throws one of my leaders off its feet, and I just blocked that road complete.

“When them bandits comes whoopin’ up the road and around that curve, they sees that they can’t stop and they can’t go around me; so they just simply flew off that grade. Honest to gosh, I——”

“Hol’ on, Art,” cautions Buck. “You ain’t speakin’ of hummin’-birds.”

“Flew!” snaps Art, floppin’ his arms, so there won’t be no mistake about it. “Flew right off. I says to myself, ‘Ah-ha!’ just like that, and then the eighth one flew off, and——”

“Stop and count again,” interrupts Pete Gonyer.

“Lemme make my statement, can’t yuh?” wails Art. “That eighth one was Scenery Sims. He went right after ’em. Mike Pelly was with Scenery, but Mike’s bronc went lame on him and wasn’t going so fast, so he stayed on the grade.”

“Did Scenery get any of them?” I asks.

“Never seen ’em after they flew. Scenery says he dived plumb to the bottom of Wind River, but there wasn’t any of them down there. Says he’s got a clue, though.”

“How did Scenery happen along?” asks Magpie.

“He was chasin’ ’em,” explains Art. “Chased ’em from Paradise. Well, sir, when I looks into the muzzles of them five .50-110’s and them two .45-60’s, I says to myself, ‘I’ve got to use mighty good judgment right now, ’cause if them guns go off I’m going to be downhearted for quite a while.’ Them .30-30’s sure do tear——”

Magpie led me outside, where we stares at each other. “What kind of a plea are you going to make?” I asks.

“Lapse of memory or insanity, Ike. Five thousand! And Scenery chased us all the way from Paradise—all seven of us. Look who’s comin’.”

It’s a buckboard, and in it is Jay Bird Whittaker and “Perfume” Parsons, his cashier. They stops in front of the saloon and the crowd comes out. Of course, everybody tries to talk at the same time, but after while we hears Perfume say:

“Well, that kinda tallies with what happened to me, only I never seen but three. The others likely was guardin’ the outside. Winchesters? Sure. The one what done the talkin’ had a awful big six-shooter.”

“Five thousand,” we hears Jay Bird say, and then me and Magpie wanders away.

“The thick plottens,” says Magpie, foolish-like. “Next thing we’ll be hearin’ of somebody what got hung for committing suicide. We will now go to the jail.”

“What for?”

“I want to see if our hero is still at large.”

He wasn’t in the jail; but on top of the sheriff’s desk is an old sombrero and in the sweat-band is the initials—I. H.

“Our hero lost his helmet,” says Magpie. “Here’s where Scenery Sims loses his clue.” And he puts the hat inside his vest.

We starts for the door, but turns right around and starts back again. Scenery, Mike and the judge are almost to the door. There ain’t no way out except right into their arms, so we steps inside a cell, pulls the door shut and sets down by the wall.

“You couldn’t hog-tie a dead-ex wagon with a loggin’-chain and a padlock,” says Magpie, mean-like.

“I’d like to know how in —— they got loose,” says I.

“Be a lot of satisfaction,” whispers Magpie, and then they comes in.

“Well,” says the judge, “we’ll set the machinery of the law into motion at once. Them criminals has got to face the bar of justice and I’ll see that they gets plenty of it. Heroic measures must be dealt with.”

“I’ll get ’em,” squeaks Scenery. “All seven of ’em. They sure are desperate and unmindful of the law when they holds up a bank and then holds up a stage while makin’ their getaway. I didn’t think it of Magpie and Ike, but I know they ain’t got no morals.”

“Crooks from their belts both ways!” snorts Mike.

“Organize a posse at once,” orders the judge, and the three of ’em goes outside, talking about it.

“Narrow escape, Ike,” grins Magpie, sneaking over to the door, “We sure was in a tight—uh——”

“Yes,” says I. “Tight and narrow. You danged fool, you knowed them doors lock when they shut tight.”

Magpie walks over and peers through the barred window. Pretty soon he says:

I goes over and peers out of the window at Reginald and his mule. Reginald looks like he had been curried with a handful of jack-knives, and the mule looks as meek as milk.

“Hey!” yells Magpie, and Reginald looks up. “Move over closer, you locoed, double-crossin’ jug-head!”

Reginald yanks hard on one rein, pulls the mule’s head plumb around to the fender of the saddle, and the mule ambles over sort of sideways.

“Wouldst talk with thee, hero,” says Magpie.

“Yes’m,” says Reginald. “Present.”

“We’re in jail,” says Magpie. “On your account, you misguided mud-turtle. Know what I mean?”

“Oh,” says Reginald. “I didn’t recognize you before. Glad to see you. In jail? Can’t get out?”

“Oh yes,” says Magpie, sweet-like. “We can get out when the sheriff unlocks the door.”

“Is that the only way?”

“Well, I helped build this jail, and I feel that if you was to shoot about ten pounds of dynamite in the proper place it might dent the wall. How are you, hero?”

“I’m fine, re’llly. The mule ran into one of those wire fences—the kind with the little thorns on. I’ve got some good news for you, Mister Simpkins.”

“I can’t shoot because I lost my gun. I think it was when we went into the wire thorns.”

“Where’s Violet?” I asks.

“Violet? Oh, yes, I forgot to tell you about her. Her folks caught her in Philadelphia.”

“Is that the good news?” asks Magpie.

“Oh no. I just wanted to tell you that you were right.”

Just then the mule lifts its head and starts ahead. Our hero just sets there and rides away.

“Just wanted to tell me I was right,” says Magpie.

“My ——!”

“It may be good news, but nobody’d believe it,” says I.

We keeps watch out of that window until dark, but don’t see anybody. Seems like everybody has joined the posse.

We’re almost asleep when we hears a noise. We hears Scenery’s voice and then hears Reginald say—

“Re’lly, I do not wish to be incarcerated.”

“I don’t give a dang!” squeaks Scenery. “You’re mebbe innocent, but you’re actin’ suspicious around here like a burglar. Sabe? Into jail you go.”

We hears him unlock the door and we hugs the corner of the cell. Comes a scuffle, Scenery squeaks out a cuss-word, and then comes a click!

“Now, dang your pink hide!” wailed Scenery. “You’ve done it—you have! And the key is on the outside where I can’t reach it!”

“I must get out,” says Reginald. “Re’lly I must, don’t you see?”

“Aw-w-w-w——!” squeals Scenery. “Locked in my own jail! Dang you!”

“It can’t last much longer,” quavers Reginald. “Re’lly it can’t.”

“The —— it can’t!” snaps Scenery.

“It’ll have to last until morning. No——”

“But it can’t!” wails Reginald. “No one has any power over it, re’lly.”

“You’re loco,” argues Scenery. “I won’t talk with you.”

“But don’t you see,” pleads Reginald. “It can not last. Don’t you see that? I wonder that any one can be so ignorant of——”

I won’t use any word to describe what follows. If you can imagine one vast eclipse of everything worth a dang, a wind blowing a million miles an hour, the biggest noise ever made—well, you’ve got a slight idea of the importance of what happened right then.

We're inside that jail cell, all dark-like, and in the next instant I saw the moon. Yessir, I looks right up at the old moon. I seen some stars around the moon and then there's sort of a veil drawn over everything and then I sees a lot more stars.

These last ain't what "Comet" Custer used to call "fixed planets," 'cause they're sort of agitated, running into each other and making little puffs of smoke when they collides. I says to myself—

"Don't be surprized at anything you see, Ike, 'cause they say this Western country is changing every day."

Then I seems to be setting down under a tree in the moonlight. Everything is peaceful. I looks up above me and I sees the granddaddy of all buzzards setting on a limb, humped up, looking down at me. Ordinarily I tolerates a buzzard, but this one is a "specimen," so I reaches down for my gun. Then I looks up at the buzzard and shakes my head.

The gun ain't in the holster, 'cause there ain't no belt to carry a holster; also and moreover there ain't no pants over which to wear the belt. I says—

"I'm dreaming that I'm out in the open without any clothes on."

"Yer-r-r-ack!" says the buzzard.

Comes a ripping sound and something lands right on my neck. I seen a Roman candle and a couple of pin-wheels and then I wriggled loose.

"Juz-z-erflookuffuff," says the buzzard.

"Magpie," says I, "you've caught a bad cold. You've been in a draft."

He seems to crane his neck a few times and then spits audible-like.

"I don't know what I had in my throat," says he, "but I think it was the key to the jail. What in —— happened, Ike?"

"I ought to know, hadn't I?" I asks. "Somebody told me, didn't they?"

"Look!" croaks Magpie. "Big dog."

It comes along towards us, coming slow.

"Danged big dog," wheezes Magpie. "Get out, Nero!" and he throws a rock at it. We heard the rock hit it, and then the dog stops and to our ears comes—

"Now—now, I've withstood too much—re'lly."

“Reginald!” gasps Magpie. “I’d forgot you.”

“I—I don’t mind,” wails Reginald. “Re’lly I don’t.”

“Where’s the sheriff?” I asks, and Reginald seems to take it under advisement.

“I don’t know, re’lly. We were together quite a while and then I seen him get on my mule and then—I don’t know, re’lly. I tried to make him understand about that dynamite, but——”

“Dynamite?” croaks Magpie. “It was dynamite.”

“So it said on the box in your cabin. I took all there was because I had no scales to weigh out ten pounds and——”

“Forty pounds if there was an ounce!” groans Magpie.

“Go on—uh—hero.”

“I just lit the what-you-call-it when I became arrested and——”

“I heard the rest,” sighs Magpie. “But what I want to know is this: why in —— didn’t you come and tell us that Violet never came? You knew danged well we were going to hold up that stage.”

“Oh, yes, that’s right,” agrees Reginald. “I re’lly must have forgotten. You see I was deeply interested in your argument, and I forgot. You were right.”

“Right about what?”

“Holding up a bank with a—er—monkey-wrench.”

“How do you know?” I asks.

“Because I did it,” says Reginald. “I proved the theory. I’m a wonder.”

There ain’t a word said for a long time and then Magpie says:

“Yes, you’re a wonder. There ain’t the least doubt about it. You’ll get about twelve years in the penitentiary. How much money did you get?”

“Quite a lot, re’lly,” says Reginald, shaky-like. “I filled both saddle-bags.”

“My ——!” grunts Magpie. “Five men with Winchesters! We’ve got to save him, Ike, and thereby save ourselves. What did you do with it, Reginald?”

“Threw it away.”

“Threw it away? Holee henhawks! Where?”

Reginald thinks for quite a while, and then, “Do you know where the road crosses that muddy place where that funny bridge is?”

“Moose Swamp,” says I. “Corduroy road.”

“I threw it in there,” says Reginald. “I was in a hurry.”

“Oh you —— fool,” groans Magpie. “You poor ——, let’s go. We’ve got to find it, Ike. Come on, Reginald, you pie-headed, brainless—uh—hero.”

Just then we hears voices. I reckon that everybody who didn’t go with that posse is on their way down to see what the big noise was. We hears Scenery’s voice squeak like the E-string of a fiddle:

“How do I know? I arrested that pro-te-jay of Magpie’s and he yanked the door shut on both of us, and then the jail rose up and left us. I don’t know a thing until I wakes up and finds myself ridin’ that mule.”

“Come on,” says Magpie, and the three of us limps around to the main street. There’s one animal at the hitch-rack—Reginald’s mule.

Magpie yanks the saddle off and throws it on the sidewalk.

“Climb on,” says he. “Nothin’ dainty about this here equipage; but maybe the three of us can hold down this long-legged son-of-a-gun.”

We put Reginald between us and started out of town. Hold him down? Say, that big hammer-headed mule needed about half a ton to make him travel smooth. We went down that road like a runaway locomotive.

We went through Pete Gonyer’s backyard and when we hit the road again we’ve got forty feet of clothes-line, two suits of underclothes, a pair of overalls and several socks.

“Guide the danged thing!” I yelps, trying to get the rope from under my nose.

“What with?” howls Magpie. “Who took the bridle off?”

“I did,” admits Reginald. “I knew how to do that much.”

On we went down that dim road, lickety-brindle, high and handsome.

“Ho-o-o-ld fast!” yells Magpie, and we went across the river so fast that the mule likely never even got his feet wet.

It’s only a mile more to Moose Swamp.

“How—are—we—going—to—get—off?” yells Magpie.

“That is easy, re’lly,” chokes Reginald. “If it isn’t, I’m a wonder.”

“Got any laundry left?” I yelps.

“The overalls.”

“Throw it over his head,” I advises. “Blind the danged thing, Magpie, and he’ll slow up.”

I feels Reginald go forward, so I know Magpie must be trying my scheme, and then Reginald straightens up. Did the mule slow up? Yeah, like Kelly did.

“Wow!” yelps Magpie; and just then I feels the rear end of that mule rise up and I turns a flip-flop with our hero in my arms.

Comes a splash and a glob and I skids into a tree with my ears, eyes and mouth full of mud. Pretty soon I hears Magpie’s voice weak-like and kinda gooie:

“Blind mule missed the bridge! Wonder if anybody’s alive?”

“I ain’t,” says I. “But I can’t answer for Reginald and the other mule.”

“I—I would be all right if somebody would take the mule off my lap,” wails Reginald. “Re’lly, I would. He has his feet in my lap and I can’t put the bridle over his head.”

“Bub-bridle?” croaks Magpie. “You’ve got the bridle?”

“Yu-yes. I th-thought we might need it.”

We led the mule out of the mud and then we managed to get Reginald on to the bank. Magpie lit a match and looked at us, but made no remarks.

“Now, where did you throw it?” asks Magpie.

“I think I can show you,” says Reginald, weak-like.

We tore our way through the brush and got back to the road, where we lit matches and let Reginald hunt for the vital spot.

“Right about there,” says he, pointing off into the swamp. “I think that is the place, re’lly.”

“You’re a —— of a robber!” groans Magpie. “Well, I reckon we’ve got to find it, Ike.”

The mud was above our knees, but we didn’t mind it. We got out in that goo and dug deep. Mosquitoes bit us every place possible and being as we’re about seven-eighths out of clothes there is plenty of possibilities.

I’ve got so many sore spots that I’m just one big ache and I can hear Magpie creak every time he stoops over. I lifted up enough mud with my two hands to build a real nice swamp, but all I ever got between my fingers was mud.

We played mud-hen for about an hour, without any luck a-tall. Somebody wrote once about a “gibbous moon.” That was the kind that shone down upon us. Two gaunt, ragged ghouls, flapping and digging in oozy slime, while on the bank stands two blots, one of which has got long ears.

After a while I hears Magpie say:

“—— the mud and everything else!” and he goes glob-globbing to the bank and crawls out.

“Get on that mule and point towards the North Star,” I hears him say to Reginald. And then he adds, “I hope you hit the North Pole and freeze your feet.”

Reginald don’t say a word. I see him get on the mule.

“Just about where is that money you stole?” asks Magpie.

“In—in the saddle-bags,” quavers Reginald.

Splat!

Magpie slapped that mule with his hat and it fades off down the road, just hitting here and there. I crawls out.

“The money in the saddle-bags?” I asks. “Why—uh—”

“Uh-huh,” says Magpie, soft-like. “Feel of this, Ike.”

He hands me a slippery, muddy object, and I runs my fingers over it. It was a monkey-wrench.

 END OF THE PROJECT GUTENBERG EBOOK NO WONDER ***

Updated editions will replace the previous one—the old editions will be renamed.

Creating the works from print editions not protected by U.S. copyright law means that no one owns a United States copyright in these works, so the Foundation (and you!) can copy and distribute it in the United States without permission and without paying copyright royalties. Special rules, set forth in the General Terms of Use part of this license, apply to copying and distributing Project Gutenberg™ electronic works to protect the PROJECT GUTENBERG™ concept and trademark. Project Gutenberg is a registered trademark, and may not be used if you charge for an eBook, except by following the terms of the trademark license, including paying royalties for use of the Project Gutenberg trademark. If you do not charge anything for copies of this eBook, complying with the trademark license is very easy. You may use this eBook for nearly any purpose such as creation of derivative works, reports, performances and research. Project Gutenberg eBooks may be modified and printed and given away—you may do practically ANYTHING in the United States with eBooks not protected by U.S. copyright law. Redistribution is subject to the trademark license, especially commercial redistribution.

START: FULL LICENSE

THE FULL PROJECT GUTENBERG™ LICENSE

PLEASE READ THIS BEFORE YOU DISTRIBUTE OR USE THIS WORK

To protect the Project Gutenberg™ mission of promoting the free distribution of electronic works, by using or distributing this work (or any other work associated in any way with the phrase “Project Gutenberg”), you agree to comply with all the terms of the Full Project Gutenberg License available with this file or online at www.gutenberg.org/license.

Section 1. General Terms of Use and Redistributing Project Gutenberg electronic works

1.A. By reading or using any part of this Project Gutenberg electronic work, you indicate that you have read, understand, agree to and accept all the terms of this license and intellectual property (trademark/copyright) agreement. If you do not agree to abide by all the terms of this agreement, you must cease using and return or destroy all copies of Project Gutenberg electronic works in your possession. If you paid a fee for obtaining a copy of or access to a Project Gutenberg electronic work and you do not agree to be bound by the terms of this agreement, you may obtain a refund from the person or entity to whom you paid the fee as set forth in paragraph 1.E.8.

1.B. “Project Gutenberg” is a registered trademark. It may only be used on or associated in any way with an electronic work by people who agree to be bound by the terms of this agreement. There are a few things that you can do with most Project Gutenberg electronic works even without complying with the full terms of this agreement. See paragraph 1.C below. There are a lot of things you can do with Project Gutenberg electronic works if you follow the terms of this agreement and help preserve free future access to Project Gutenberg electronic works. See paragraph 1.E below.

1.C. The Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation (“the Foundation” or PGLAF), owns a compilation copyright in the collection of Project Gutenberg electronic works. Nearly all the individual works in the collection are in the public domain in the United States. If an individual work is unprotected by copyright law in the United States and you are located in the United States, we do not claim a right to prevent you from copying, distributing, performing, displaying or creating derivative works based on the work as long as all references to Project Gutenberg are removed. Of course, we hope that you will support the Project Gutenberg mission of promoting free access to electronic works by freely sharing Project Gutenberg works in compliance with the terms of this agreement for keeping the Project Gutenberg name associated with the work. You can easily comply with the terms of this agreement by keeping this work in the same format with its attached full Project Gutenberg License when you share it without charge with others.

1.D. The copyright laws of the place where you are located also govern what you can do with this work. Copyright laws in most countries are in a constant state of change. If you are outside the United States, check the laws of your country in addition to the terms of this agreement before downloading, copying, displaying, performing, distributing or creating derivative works based on this work or any other Project Gutenberg work. The Foundation makes no representations concerning the copyright status of any work in any country other than the United States.

1.E. Unless you have removed all references to Project Gutenberg:

1.E.1. The following sentence, with active links to, or other immediate access to, the full Project Gutenberg License must appear prominently whenever any copy of a Project Gutenberg work (any work on which the phrase “Project Gutenberg” appears, or with which the phrase “Project Gutenberg” is associated) is accessed, displayed, performed, viewed, copied or distributed:

This eBook is for the use of anyone anywhere in the United States and most other parts of the world at no cost and with almost no restrictions whatsoever. You may copy it, give it away or re-use it under the terms of the Project Gutenberg™ License included with this eBook or online at www.gutenberg.org. If you are not located in the United States, you will have to check the laws of the country where you are located before using this eBook.

1.E.2. If an individual Project Gutenberg electronic work is derived from texts not protected by U.S. copyright law (does not contain a notice indicating that it is posted with permission of the copyright holder), the work can be copied and distributed to anyone in the United States without paying any fees or charges. If you are redistributing or providing access to a work with the phrase “Project Gutenberg” associated with or appearing on the work, you must comply either with the requirements of paragraphs 1.E.1 through 1.E.7 or obtain permission for the use of the work and the Project Gutenberg trademark as set forth in paragraphs 1.E.8 or 1.E.9.

1.E.3. If an individual Project Gutenberg electronic work is posted with the permission of the copyright holder, your use and distribution must comply with both paragraphs 1.E.1 through 1.E.7 and any additional terms imposed by the copyright holder. Additional terms will be linked to the Project Gutenberg License for all works posted with the permission of the copyright holder found at the beginning of this work.

1.E.4. Do not unlink or detach or remove the full Project Gutenberg License terms from this work, or any files containing a part of this work or any other work associated with Project Gutenberg.

1.E.5. Do not copy, display, perform, distribute or redistribute this electronic work, or any part of this electronic work, without prominently displaying the sentence set forth in paragraph 1.E.1 with active links or immediate access to the full terms of the Project Gutenberg License.

1.E.6. You may convert to and distribute this work in any binary, compressed, marked up, nonproprietary or proprietary form, including any word processing or hypertext form. However, if you provide access to or distribute copies of a Project Gutenberg work in a format other than “Plain Vanilla ASCII” or other format used in the official version posted on the official Project Gutenberg website (www.gutenberg.org), you must, at no additional cost, fee or expense to the user, provide a copy, a means of exporting a copy, or a means of obtaining a copy upon request, of the work in its original “Plain Vanilla ASCII” or other form. Any alternate format must include the full Project Gutenberg License as specified in paragraph 1.E.1.

1.E.7. Do not charge a fee for access to, viewing, displaying, performing, copying or distributing any Project Gutenberg works unless you comply with paragraph 1.E.8 or 1.E.9.

1.E.8. You may charge a reasonable fee for copies of or providing access to or distributing Project Gutenberg electronic works provided that:

- You pay a royalty fee of 20% of the gross profits you derive from the use of Project Gutenberg works calculated using the method you already use to calculate your applicable taxes. The fee is owed to the owner of the Project Gutenberg trademark, but he has agreed to donate royalties under this paragraph to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation. Royalty payments must be paid within 60 days following each date on which you prepare (or are legally required to prepare) your periodic tax returns. Royalty payments should be clearly marked as such and sent to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive

Foundation at the address specified in Section 4, “Information about donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation.”

- You provide a full refund of any money paid by a user who notifies you in writing (or by e-mail) within 30 days of receipt that s/he does not agree to the terms of the full Project Gutenberg™ License. You must require such a user to return or destroy all copies of the works possessed in a physical medium and discontinue all use of and all access to other copies of Project Gutenberg™ works.
- You provide, in accordance with paragraph 1.F.3, a full refund of any money paid for a work or a replacement copy, if a defect in the electronic work is discovered and reported to you within 90 days of receipt of the work.
- You comply with all other terms of this agreement for free distribution of Project Gutenberg™ works.

1.E.9. If you wish to charge a fee or distribute a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work or group of works on different terms than are set forth in this agreement, you must obtain permission in writing from the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, the manager of the Project Gutenberg™ trademark. Contact the Foundation as set forth in Section 3 below.

1.F.

1.F.1. Project Gutenberg volunteers and employees expend considerable effort to identify, do copyright research on, transcribe and proofread works not protected by U.S. copyright law in creating the Project Gutenberg™ collection. Despite these efforts, Project Gutenberg™ electronic works, and the medium on which they may be stored, may contain “Defects,” such as, but not limited to, incomplete, inaccurate or corrupt data, transcription errors, a copyright or other intellectual property infringement, a defective or damaged disk or other medium, a computer virus, or computer codes that damage or cannot be read by your equipment.

1.F.2. LIMITED WARRANTY, DISCLAIMER OF DAMAGES - Except for the “Right of Replacement or Refund” described in paragraph 1.F.3, the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, the owner of the Project Gutenberg™ trademark, and any other party distributing a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work under this agreement, disclaim all liability to you for damages, costs and expenses, including legal fees. YOU AGREE THAT YOU HAVE NO REMEDIES FOR NEGLIGENCE, STRICT LIABILITY, BREACH OF WARRANTY OR BREACH OF CONTRACT EXCEPT THOSE PROVIDED IN PARAGRAPH 1.F.3. YOU AGREE THAT THE FOUNDATION, THE TRADEMARK OWNER, AND ANY DISTRIBUTOR UNDER THIS AGREEMENT WILL NOT BE LIABLE TO YOU FOR ACTUAL, DIRECT, INDIRECT, CONSEQUENTIAL, PUNITIVE OR INCIDENTAL DAMAGES EVEN IF YOU GIVE NOTICE OF THE POSSIBILITY OF SUCH DAMAGE.

1.F.3. LIMITED RIGHT OF REPLACEMENT OR REFUND - If you discover a defect in this electronic work within 90 days of receiving it, you can receive a refund of the money (if any) you paid for it by sending a written explanation to the person you received the work from. If you received the work on a physical medium, you must return the medium with your written explanation. The person or entity that provided you with the defective work may elect to provide a replacement copy in lieu of a refund. If you received the work electronically, the person or entity providing it to you may choose to give you a second opportunity to receive the work electronically in lieu of a refund. If the second copy is also defective, you may demand a refund in writing without further opportunities to fix the problem.

1.F.4. Except for the limited right of replacement or refund set forth in paragraph 1.F.3, this work is provided to you 'AS-IS', WITH NO OTHER WARRANTIES OF ANY KIND, EXPRESS OR IMPLIED, INCLUDING BUT NOT LIMITED TO WARRANTIES OF MERCHANTABILITY OR FITNESS FOR ANY PURPOSE.

1.F.5. Some states do not allow disclaimers of certain implied warranties or the exclusion or limitation of certain types of damages. If any disclaimer or limitation set forth in this agreement violates the law of the state applicable to this agreement, the agreement shall be interpreted to make the maximum disclaimer or limitation permitted by the applicable state law. The invalidity or unenforceability of any provision of this agreement shall not void the remaining provisions.

1.F.6. INDEMNITY - You agree to indemnify and hold the Foundation, the trademark owner, any agent or employee of the Foundation, anyone providing copies of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works in accordance with this agreement, and any volunteers associated with the production, promotion and distribution of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works, harmless from all liability, costs and expenses, including legal fees, that arise directly or indirectly from any of the following which you do or cause to occur: (a) distribution of this or any Project Gutenberg work, (b) alteration, modification, or additions or deletions to any Project Gutenberg work, and (c) any Defect you cause.

Section 2. Information about the Mission of Project Gutenberg

Project Gutenberg is synonymous with the free distribution of electronic works in formats readable by the widest variety of computers including obsolete, old, middle-aged and new computers. It exists because of the efforts of hundreds of volunteers and donations from people in all walks of life.

Volunteers and financial support to provide volunteers with the assistance they need are critical to reaching Project Gutenberg's goals and ensuring that the Project Gutenberg collection will remain freely available for generations to come. In 2001, the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation was created to provide a secure and permanent future for Project Gutenberg and future generations. To learn more about the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation and how your efforts and donations can help, see Sections 3 and 4 and the Foundation information page at www.gutenberg.org.

Section 3. Information about the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation

The Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation is a non-profit 501(c)(3) educational corporation organized under the laws of the state of Mississippi and granted tax exempt status by the Internal Revenue Service. The Foundation's EIN or federal tax identification number is 64-6221541. Contributions to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation are tax deductible to the full extent permitted by U.S. federal laws and your state's laws.

The Foundation's business office is located at 41 Watchung Plaza #516, Montclair NJ 07042, USA, +1 (862) 621-9288. Email contact links and up to date contact information can be found at the Foundation's website and official page at www.gutenberg.org/contact

Section 4. Information about Donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation

Project Gutenberg™ depends upon and cannot survive without widespread public support and donations to carry out its mission of increasing the number of public domain and licensed works that can be freely distributed in machine-readable form accessible by the widest array of equipment including outdated equipment. Many small donations ($1 to $5,000) are particularly important to maintaining tax exempt status with the IRS.

The Foundation is committed to complying with the laws regulating charities and charitable donations in all 50 states of the United States. Compliance requirements are not uniform and it takes a considerable effort, much paperwork and many fees to meet and keep up with these requirements. We do not solicit donations in locations where we have not received written confirmation of compliance. To SEND DONATIONS or determine the status of compliance for any particular state visit www.gutenberg.org/donate.

While we cannot and do not solicit contributions from states where we have not met the solicitation requirements, we know of no prohibition against accepting unsolicited donations from donors in such states who approach us with offers to donate.

International donations are gratefully accepted, but we cannot make any statements concerning tax treatment of donations received from outside the United States. U.S. laws alone swamp our small staff.

Please check the Project Gutenberg web pages for current donation methods and addresses. Donations are accepted in a number of other ways including checks, online payments and credit card donations. To donate, please visit: www.gutenberg.org/donate.

Section 5. General Information About Project Gutenberg electronic works

Professor Michael S. Hart was the originator of the Project Gutenberg concept of a library of electronic works that could be freely shared with anyone. For forty years, he produced and distributed Project Gutenberg eBooks with only a loose network of volunteer support.

Project Gutenberg eBooks are often created from several printed editions, all of which are confirmed as not protected by copyright in the U.S. unless a copyright notice is included. Thus, we do not necessarily keep eBooks in compliance with any particular paper edition.

Most people start at our website which has the main PG search facility:
www.gutenberg.org.

This website includes information about Project Gutenberg, including how to make donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, how to help produce our new eBooks, and how to subscribe to our email newsletter to hear about new eBooks.
