

ANC

APRIL 1953

35 Cents

Avon SCIENCE FICTION and FANTASY Reader

ALL
NEW STORIES

CRACK OF DOOM

by Milton Lesser

THE PARASITE

by Arthur C. Clarke

BREAKING POINT

by John Christopher

FOREVER IS SO LONG

by John Jakes

DP

by Jack Vance

PLUS OTHER STORIES AND FEATURES

ANC

APRIL 1953
35 Cents

Avon SCIENCE FICTION and FANTASY Reader

ALL
NEW STORIES

CRACK OF DOOM

by Milton Lesser

THE PARASITE

by Arthur C. Clarke

BREAKING POINT

by John Christopher

FOREVER IS SO LONG

by John Jakes

DP

by Jack Vance

PLUS OTHER STORIES
AND FEATURES

The Project Gutenberg eBook of Forever is so long

This eBook is for the use of anyone anywhere in the United States and most other parts of the world at no cost and with almost no restrictions whatsoever. You may copy it, give it away or re-use it under the terms of the Project Gutenberg License included with this eBook or online at www.gutenberg.org. If you are not located in the United States, you will have to check the laws of the country where you are located before using this eBook.

Title: Forever is so long

Author: John Jakes

Illustrator: Everett Raymond Kinstler
Leo Manso

Release date: June 21, 2026 [eBook #78908]

Language: English

Original publication: New York: Stratford Novels Inc., 1953

Other information and formats: www.gutenberg.org/ebooks/78908

Credits: Tom Trussel (This file was produced from images generously made available by The Internet Archive)

 START OF THE PROJECT GUTENBERG EBOOK FOREVER IS SO LONG ***

Transcribed from Avon Science Fiction and Fantasy Reader, April 1953
(Vol. 1, no. 2).

Forever Is So Long

by John Jakes

They walked the streets of the same city, but they were separated by the ages. She feared the man she loved even as her arms clasped him to her. For when science presented Frank Ridley with the gift of neverending life it made him desperately unhappy, and placed him in a world peopled by brief and flitting shadows....

Illustrator: Everett Raymond Kinstler

After a year in the hospital, they gave Frank Ridley a new suit of clothes and a topcoat and told him he could go. Dr. Lord said they would call him when they wanted him, so Ridley put on the topcoat and walked through the doors and down the wide steps into the windy, sunlit morning.

He felt in the pocket of the topcoat, found cigarettes. His fingers caressed the material of the coat, as if it were entirely new to him. He broke open the pack and lit a cigarette. The smoke inside him was an almost new sensation, and he was pleasantly bewildered, like a small child. A year in the hospital, and he was a new man, but he had forgotten what life and the things of life were like.

But he had not forgotten her. All through the long months, while the doctors bent over him, while he lay half-dreaming in the life fluid, while the needles filled his veins with a new and mighty blood, he had remembered her face and her mouth and her hair.

Quickly, Frank Ridley began to walk. He looked at the buildings, at the towers, at the lake lying taut and blue in the sun. He saw the rockets burning up into the morning sky, bound for the Moon, Mars, Venus, carrying passengers and cargoes to the colonists. Gradually, he again became familiar with his native city of New Chicago.

Two blocks from the hospital, he found a street phone booth. It was empty. Eagerly, he crowded his bulky body inside and closed the door. Dialing information, he felt his breath come heavily.

The screen lit up and the face of the operator appeared.

“Number, please,” she said, smiling.

“I’d like to call Miss Virginia Halloran. I ... don’t remember the number. She used to live at ninety-fourteen Lake Drive.”

“I will try that address,” the operator said.

Ridley glanced at the new gleaming wrist chron they had given him. A quarter after nine. Normally, women did not go to work in the Department of Fuel Statistics at the Rocket Center until ten. She should be....

The screen blurred.

And he was looking at her.

She was not a beautiful girl, with her slender face and slightly thin lips. But there was an intangible something in her eyes that Ridley had seen in few women. A promise, perhaps, of fire and affection. He swallowed stiffly.

“Hello,” he said.

She peered at him, not believing. “Frank ... Frank Ridley ... that’s right, isn’t it?”

“Yes, Ginny. It’s me.”

“It’s been a long time, Frank.”

“Yes. A year.”

“What happened, Frank? I thought you were dead, or had gone out on the rockets. That night ... my birthday ... you never came ...”

“I know, I know. I’ll tell you about it. Could we eat breakfast? Couldn’t you skip work? I want to talk to you. I...”

She nodded quickly. “Of course. Where?”

He tried to remember, and could not. “I can’t think of any place we used to eat.” He was ashamed, because he had only remembered her face through the dark, painful year.

“The Lake Front Cafe. Near Washington. Remember?”

“I’ll find it. Half an hour?”

“All right.” She hesitated. “Frank....”

“Yes?”

“What happened?” Her voice was soft, and her eyes in the screen were gentle and, somehow, full of loneliness.

“I’ll explain when we eat. Ginny, tell me. Is there anyone else now?”

“No, Frank.”

He tried to grin. “Half an hour.”

She nodded again and the screen went blank.

He went out into the street, feeling the sunlight on his face and the wind pulling at his topcoat. Perhaps she still loved him. A year was a long time, but he could hope.

As he lit another cigarette, he felt with a terrible certainty that she would cease to love him when she learned the secret that lodged in his body. The secret that would, eventually, roar like thunder around Earth and out to the stars where Earthmen rode their rockets.

He turned and walked quickly down the street, and there was a sudden coldness in the morning sun.

She was waiting at a table on the terrace of the Lake Front Cafe. He walked up to her, almost shyly, and sat down. She smiled. A few feet beyond the table, the waters of the lake shimmered and made soft noises. A great rocket lifted across the skyline, trailing fire and smoke into the blueness.

They ordered coffee and Ridley gave her a cigarette. He was trying to make many small motions, trying to take up time, because he was afraid of what was coming.

She took a sip of the coffee and looked at him. "I still love you, Frank."

He glanced away. That was like her—the strange sense of honesty and naturalness that had impressed him at their first meeting. The feeling that their love was inherently right.

"I've been gone a long time," he said.

"Where?"

"In the Rocket Hospital."

She set down the cup, surprised. "Here in New Chicago?"

"Yes, all the time. I couldn't call you."

"Were you sick? Frank, I don't understand this. A whole year out of a man's life, and not a word...."

He reached out and took hold of her hand, squeezing it, because he was afraid that he would inevitably lose her, and he did not want that. He wanted to keep her, and the sunlight and the bright morning.

“I’m going to tell you what happened to me,” he said softly. “I have Dr. Lord’s permission. It’ll be out soon enough. You mustn’t tell anyone.”

She frowned. “I won’t.”

“Do you know who Dr. Lord is?”

“The longevity man. Educated at the University of Marsport.”

“That’s right. My father was one of his best friends. They saw the asteroids together in their student days, working on an ore jumper. I’ve known Dr. Lord for a long time. Last year, when I came in from the Venus run and took my two months’ leave ... when I met you ... Dr. Lord called me.

“He needed help, with an experiment. An experiment, he felt, that couldn’t fail. He knew I was a jetman, and strong, and he knew me personally. He asked me if I would help him. I thought it would mean so much to people that I ... I said I would help him. He said it would have to be done secretly. That’s why I never called you, or wrote.”

“You’ve been a subject for an experiment for a whole year?”

“That’s right. The experiment was completed a week ago.”

“Success?”

He nodded slowly and fumbled for a cigarette. He knew what her next question would be. He lit the cigarette and waited, watching the smoke whip away toward the lake.

“What kind of an experiment was it?”

“I don’t know the details. They replaced my normal blood with some kind of fluid Dr. Lord had developed.”

She waited, her lips slightly parted, her face bearing a faint trace of fear. The feather on top of her hat bobbed as she leaned forward.

He swallowed hard.

“Ginny ... with this fluid inside of me ... I’ll ... I’m going to live to be three hundred years old.”

She released his hand quickly, striking the coffee cup. It spilled and the brown liquid dripped across the table and fell on the stone terrace in a dark shining pool.

“Are ... are they sure?”

“Yes, as sure as they can be. That’s why I had to talk to you.”

She got up and walked over to the railing, stood staring at the water. Ridley followed and put his arm around her.

“That’s it,” he murmured. “That’s why I had to talk to you. I’m going to be a kind of immortal, and I want that. I want that because I think, eventually, people can all be almost immortal, and can use the extra years for good things.”

“But I can’t love you, Frank. I can’t love you if I’m old and dying at eighty or so and you’re still young. We can’t go on.”

He put his hands on her shoulders, turned her around so that she faced him.

“Can’t we?” he said.

She buried her head in his shoulder, crying. He saw people on the terrace watching them and didn’t care.

“We can talk,” he whispered. “I’ll have some time to myself now ... a month or two. We can do a lot of talking and decide. I can’t lose you, Ginny.”

She lifted her face and he bent down and kissed her, feeling her mouth warm and soft with the sun.

“We’ll try, Frank,” she said a moment later. “Perhaps we can do something ... I don’t know what. You’re cut off from me. You’re cut off from the rest of the human race now.”

He choked at her words. Cut off from the human race. Yes, he was.

To help them, he had isolated himself from them. And from her.

“I’d better go to work now,” she told him. “Call me tonight. You can come over. We’ll talk, as you say. Perhaps in a month or two....”

He said, “I hope so.”

He paid the check and they walked out of the cafe, holding hands. He took her to a copter station and stood watching the machine rise into the sky, blades making a silver whirl.

He had a cigarette in his hands, but his fingers tightened on it and crushed it. He felt the tobacco slip through his fingers as he watched the copter in the sky.

In the window, he had seen her crying.

He went back to the hospital because he had no other place to go. There was a message for him at the main desk. Dr. Lord wanted to see him.

Ridley found the tall, gray-haired scientist in his office, gazing out of the window and smoking a brown cigar. When Ridley came in, the doctor turned, anxiety on his darkly tanned old face.

"I got your message at the desk," Ridley said awkwardly.

"Yes, uh, Frank, sit down."

Lord seated himself in a large red leather swivel chair behind the desk. He rolled the cigar in his fingers nervously.

"Something important?" Ridley asked.

"I'm afraid so. I hate to tell you this, Frank."

Ridley frowned. "What is it?"

"You've been under a strain for a whole year," Lord went on, "and I promised you time to rest, but now...."

"Doctor," Ridley said quietly, "tell me."

"Well, Frank, you know that I told you about experiments similar to mine that are being conducted on Mars."

Ridley remembered that. "University of Marsopolis, wasn't it?"

"Yes. Dr. Thag. A brilliant man, brilliant. But he's run into trouble. I received a beam message from him just about an hour ago. His plasma replacement technique was faulty, somehow. His subject went insane and had to be shot."

Ridley tightened a hand on the chair arm.

“That sort of thing can’t be allowed to go on,” Lord told him earnestly. “We scientists have the right to experiment, but not at the risk of damaging human life. That’s why we’ve always had such a hell of a hard time. I was almost ninety-nine per cent sure the technique was correct when I started the experiment on you.”

“Get to the point,” Ridley said irritably.

“Frank, I’m taking the rocket to Marsopolis tonight. I want to help Dr. Thag. I want to set up a demonstration replacement, perhaps lasting only a few moments, just enough for him to check and find his mistake. I need you for a subject.”

“For God’s sake,” Ridley said suddenly, “haven’t I had enough? Twelve months in this goddamned hospital and now...”

“I know, I know,” Lord interrupted. “And I’m sorry. But it’s got to be done, if we want to see man’s dream of long life come true. I thought you were interested in that dream when I chose you. You said you were.”

Ridley remembered his father, an educator at a great university, who had told him of the cruelty in man, the greed, the grasping hunger. His father had made him learn the great lesson: that man was in too much of a hurry. That he needed more time, to develop his skill in living with other men. That a normal span of years only gave occasional glimmerings of the peace between men that could be achieved. With time could come education ... education of the spirit. That was the dream.

Ridley shook his head wearily. “I still want what you want.”

“Then you’ll come? The rocket jets off at ten tonight, Waukegan Port.”

Desperately, Ridley thought of Ginny and the months they were to have spent. They, too, needed time, to work out the problem that lay between them. For a long minute, Ridley thought about her.

And then his brain became suddenly alert.

Perhaps ... perhaps....

“Dr. Lord, I want something in return, if I go with you. It’s selfish, I know it’s selfish, but it’s something I need.”

Lord put the cigar between his lips, drew in and blew out a cloud of smoke. He rolled the cigar around in his fingers once more.

“Go ahead.”

With hope churning crazily in him, Ridley leaned forward and began to speak....

Ridley was waiting for Ginny that afternoon when she came home from her job at the Department of Fuel Statistics. He stood in the lobby of the apartment building, smoking. When he saw her coming toward the door, he crushed out his cigarette under his foot.

She let the door close slowly when she saw him. In his face she could see trouble and anxiety. Without a word, she went to the lift and pressed the button.

They rode up to the twelfth floor in silence. Not until they were in her small apartment did she speak.

“Something’s wrong, isn’t it, Frank?”

The words stuck in his throat. He couldn’t tell her. All he could say was, “Yes.”

She walked to the window and pressed a button. The inlaid panels folded away, exposing a great expanse of glassite. Twilight lay on the lake beyond. Down Lake Drive, in either direction, lights began to come on in the towers. They were warm yellow lights, but to Ridley they were lonely and beyond reach. They were the lights of normal human homes. Ginny smoked quietly, watching the lake, waiting for him to speak. When he did say something, it was clumsy and halting, and he knew it the moment it was out of his mouth.

“Ginny ... I’m ... going.”

She turned. “Where?”

“To Mars.”

“At least you’re telling me this time.”

“Ginny, I’ve got to go....” He moved close to her, speaking rapidly, feeling the drive inside of him. He explained the situation, and went on, spilling out the dream that he had held for years ... of no more war ... no more hatred ... and long golden days that could be filled with learning and real enjoyment of the beauty of the world they lived in.

“It’s all very nice,” she said harshly, “but it doesn’t help us. We have no time to talk this thing out.”

“Ginny, that’s bitter talk. You’ve waited a long time, and I’m sorry, but now you’re bitter because there’s something else I have to do.”

“One or the other, Frank. That’s the way it’s got to be. Somewhere, everybody has to make a choice.”

“We don’t have to.”

She slipped her cigarette into a wall dispenser and it vanished with a ghostly whisper of air.

“What do you mean?”

“I talked to Dr. Lord for a long time this afternoon, I argued with him ... told him about you ... us ... and I finally persuaded him.”

She did not ask another question, but waited.

After a moment, Ridley took a deep breath and said, “Dr. Lord will give you the new blood, if you want it. You can live to be as old as I am.”

“Oh, Frank....”

She held on to him tightly, and he grew cold when he heard her whisper, “I can’t. I can’t, I can’t.”

He said softly, “Why?”

She broke away, pointing out the window at the tower and the lights along the lake.

“Look at the lights, Frank. Those belong to people who are in love like we are. They have homes, and children, and normal lives. I want that, Frank. I want to belong to the human race.” Her voice was full of sorrow.

“And my loving you ... that isn’t enough?”

“I don’t know, Frank. I honestly don’t know.”

“It’s late, Ginny.” His arms went around her again. “We’re late. Out of all the people in this crazy mixed-up world, we have to be the ones with only hours to decide. I guess I’ve got the dream to work for. I guess you can’t have everything.”

He pushed her away gently. “I’ve got to go. I’ve got to be at Waukegan Port by ten.”

Picking up his coat from the couch, he walked quietly to the door. There, he turned and took one final look at her, wanting to remember the way she was standing, looking at the yellow lights in the towers that meant so much to her.

All the way down in the lift, he felt a terrible sense of loneliness, of emptiness, as if a chunk of his being had been somehow cut out of him. Now all that remained was his long, long life. It would have to be filled with work. He would have to lose himself in that work, trying to help people. He would have to make time for more people to live. Perhaps he could forget her.

Out in the street, he headed for a mobile station. A rocket burned across the sky, like a star falling away and becoming lost in the dark.

Ridley hurried on. Rain began to spatter lightly on his face. It was cold rain.

A man and a woman hurried by him, laughing, holding hands. He hunted for a cigarette, but could not get it lit. The man and woman were gone down the street.

And Frank Ridley knew that no matter how he worked, no matter how far he traveled to the worlds lying far out in the rocket lanes, that the years without her would be as cold and as dark as the rain through which he walked....

Lord was not at the hospital. One of the nurses gave Ridley a suitcase full of new clothes. He ate dinner in the dining-room with the doctors and nurses. One young student-nurse stared at him as he was eating, tremendous curiosity on her young face. Someone in the hospital must have told her about him.

He bent down over his food. That would be the way of it. Wherever he went, stares. People looking at him, envying him.

He sat up straight. His fork rattled against his plate. They might begrudge him the extra years. For a long, long time, they might ... hate him.

After dinner he took a mobile out to the Waukegan Port. He chainsmoked, and his throat was not used to it. He was coughing hoarsely by the time he reached the field.

The rocket lay in its launching rack. Passengers were already boarding. The great expanse of concrete was lit by search-beams that shone brightly behind the rain.

For Ridley, it was goodbye to Earth for a while. Goodbye to the Earth he had known only for one day. He would come to know it again, but it would be remote and alien then.

He walked through the gate in the wire fence after showing his credentials. He walked straight across the field, the bag leaden in his hand. The rain fell and ran down all over his face and soaked his hair and his coat. He kept walking. He kept thinking about her.

All at once he stopped, shook his head and straightened up. He quickened his step and went briskly up the ramp into the great hull.

He found his cabin, hung up the wet coat and deposited his bag. Then, he proceeded to the lounge where he ordered a drink. Whisky tasted good, warm and mellow, after being cut off from life for so long.

Lord stood by the observation window, watching the bustle of activity on the field. Huge crates of machinery were being loaded into a lower hold. Ridley touched Lord's arm lightly to let him know that he had arrived.

The doctor's face was worried.

"What did she say?" he asked.

"No," Frank replied evenly. He took a sip of the whisky. "She said no."

“Um. I beamed Dr. Thag. He’ll meet us at the port in Marsopolis. I expect we’ll be there for a month or so. He wants to study the technique thoroughly, talk to you and all that. There’ll be other doctors there, from all over Mars....”

“If you don’t mind,” Ridley said, “I wish you wouldn’t talk to me about that tonight.”

“Oh,” said Lord, “sorry.”

The warning siren screamed through the ship. Ridley glanced at his wrist chron. “Five minutes till jet off,” he said.

He turned back, watching the field.

A figure was running across the wet concrete toward the ship. Ridley smiled at that. It would be ironical. Missing a trip to Mars by a matter of minutes.

Suddenly, he put the palm of one hand against the window, pressing, straining to see.

The figure came on, through the rain, hurrying ... hurrying....

Ridley breathed, “Ginny....”

He was waiting for her on the ramp. She was calling to him. The lights and the rain made a crazy blur. Ridley felt his suit cling to his body. She came up the ramp and slipped. He caught her and pulled her to him.

“I’m going,” she said, “I’m going with you....”

Frank Ridley, with the blood of near-immortality in him, was crying, because the years ahead had looked so dark and lonely, and because no one could tell he was crying as they stood together in the rain.

Finally, the purser signaled for the ramp to be rolled up. They hurried inside.

“I had to come,” she told him. “I love you, Frank. It’s enough for us, love. I thought about you being alone, and I knew I wanted to be with you....”

He kissed her.

After changing his suit, he joined her in the lounge. The lights had been turned out, so that the passengers could observe the spectacle of take-off. Ginny stood beside Dr. Lord, talking and smoking. The jets made thunder.

They were well beyond the atmosphere of Earth when Ridley put his arm around her. She leaned close and kissed his cheek.

“Dr. Lord and I have been talking,” she said. “He’s told me about the experiments. If you can stay with me in the hospital....”

Ridley nodded.

They watched Earth falling away. The rain had been left far behind. Every minute or so, Frank would turn and look at her. The cigarette illuminated her face with a warm orange glow, and in her eyes he saw love for many lifetimes.

He held her tightly, and together they watched Earth grow smaller, no longer cold, but now full of greenness and warmth and the dream they would some day come to share.

Dr. Lord smiled as he sat and watched the first two immortals....

Transcriber's note:

This etext was produced from Avon Science Fiction and Fantasy Reader, April 1953 (Vol. 1, no. 2).

Obvious errors have been silently corrected in this version, but minor inconsistencies have been retained as printed.

 END OF THE PROJECT GUTENBERG EBOOK FOREVER IS SO LONG ***

Updated editions will replace the previous one—the old editions will be renamed.

Creating the works from print editions not protected by U.S. copyright law means that no one owns a United States copyright in these works, so the Foundation (and you!) can copy and distribute it in the United States without permission and without paying copyright royalties. Special rules, set forth in the General Terms of Use part of this license, apply to copying and distributing Project Gutenberg™ electronic works to protect the PROJECT GUTENBERG™ concept and trademark. Project Gutenberg is a registered trademark, and may not be used if you charge for an eBook, except by following the terms of the trademark license, including paying royalties for use of the Project Gutenberg trademark. If you do not charge anything for copies of this eBook, complying with the trademark license is very easy. You may use this eBook for nearly any purpose such as creation of derivative works, reports, performances and research. Project Gutenberg eBooks may be modified and printed and given away—you may do practically ANYTHING in the United States with eBooks not protected by U.S. copyright law. Redistribution is subject to the trademark license, especially commercial redistribution.

START: FULL LICENSE

THE FULL PROJECT GUTENBERG™ LICENSE

PLEASE READ THIS BEFORE YOU DISTRIBUTE OR USE THIS WORK

To protect the Project Gutenberg™ mission of promoting the free distribution of electronic works, by using or distributing this work (or any other work associated in any way with the phrase “Project Gutenberg”), you agree to comply with all the terms of the Full Project Gutenberg License available with this file or online at www.gutenberg.org/license.

Section 1. General Terms of Use and Redistributing Project Gutenberg electronic works

1.A. By reading or using any part of this Project Gutenberg electronic work, you indicate that you have read, understand, agree to and accept all the terms of this license and intellectual property (trademark/copyright) agreement. If you do not agree to abide by all the terms of this agreement, you must cease using and return or destroy all copies of Project Gutenberg electronic works in your possession. If you paid a fee for obtaining a copy of or access to a Project Gutenberg electronic work and you do not agree to be bound by the terms of this agreement, you may obtain a refund from the person or entity to whom you paid the fee as set forth in paragraph 1.E.8.

1.B. “Project Gutenberg” is a registered trademark. It may only be used on or associated in any way with an electronic work by people who agree to be bound by the terms of this agreement. There are a few things that you can do with most Project Gutenberg electronic works even without complying with the full terms of this agreement. See paragraph 1.C below. There are a lot of things you can do with Project Gutenberg electronic works if you follow the terms of this agreement and help preserve free future access to Project Gutenberg electronic works. See paragraph 1.E below.

1.C. The Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation (“the Foundation” or PGLAF), owns a compilation copyright in the collection of Project Gutenberg electronic works. Nearly all the individual works in the collection are in the public domain in the United States. If an individual work is unprotected by copyright law in the United States and you are located in the United States, we do not claim a right to prevent you from copying, distributing, performing, displaying or creating derivative works based on the work as long as all references to Project Gutenberg are removed. Of course, we hope that you will support the Project Gutenberg mission of promoting free access to electronic works by freely sharing Project Gutenberg works in compliance with the terms of this agreement for keeping the Project Gutenberg name associated with the work. You can easily comply with the terms of this agreement by keeping this work in the same format with its attached full Project Gutenberg License when you share it without charge with others.

1.D. The copyright laws of the place where you are located also govern what you can do with this work. Copyright laws in most countries are in a constant state of change. If you are outside the United States, check the laws of your country in addition to the terms of this agreement before downloading, copying, displaying, performing, distributing or creating derivative works based on this work or any other Project Gutenberg work. The Foundation makes no representations concerning the copyright status of any work in any country other than the United States.

1.E. Unless you have removed all references to Project Gutenberg:

1.E.1. The following sentence, with active links to, or other immediate access to, the full Project Gutenberg License must appear prominently whenever any copy of a Project Gutenberg work (any work on which the phrase “Project Gutenberg” appears, or with which the phrase “Project Gutenberg” is associated) is accessed, displayed, performed, viewed, copied or distributed:

This eBook is for the use of anyone anywhere in the United States and most other parts of the world at no cost and with almost no restrictions whatsoever. You may copy it, give it away or re-use it under the terms of the Project Gutenberg™ License included with this eBook or online at www.gutenberg.org. If you are not located in the United States, you will have to check the laws of the country where you are located before using this eBook.

1.E.2. If an individual Project Gutenberg electronic work is derived from texts not protected by U.S. copyright law (does not contain a notice indicating that it is posted with permission of the copyright holder), the work can be copied and distributed to anyone in the United States without paying any fees or charges. If you are redistributing or providing access to a work with the phrase “Project Gutenberg” associated with or appearing on the work, you must comply either with the requirements of paragraphs 1.E.1 through 1.E.7 or obtain permission for the use of the work and the Project Gutenberg trademark as set forth in paragraphs 1.E.8 or 1.E.9.

1.E.3. If an individual Project Gutenberg electronic work is posted with the permission of the copyright holder, your use and distribution must comply with both paragraphs 1.E.1 through 1.E.7 and any additional terms imposed by the copyright holder. Additional terms will be linked to the Project Gutenberg License for all works posted with the permission of the copyright holder found at the beginning of this work.

1.E.4. Do not unlink or detach or remove the full Project Gutenberg License terms from this work, or any files containing a part of this work or any other work associated with Project Gutenberg.

1.E.5. Do not copy, display, perform, distribute or redistribute this electronic work, or any part of this electronic work, without prominently displaying the sentence set forth in paragraph 1.E.1 with active links or immediate access to the full terms of the Project Gutenberg License.

1.E.6. You may convert to and distribute this work in any binary, compressed, marked up, nonproprietary or proprietary form, including any word processing or hypertext form. However, if you provide access to or distribute copies of a Project Gutenberg work in a format other than “Plain Vanilla ASCII” or other format used in the official version posted on the official Project Gutenberg website (www.gutenberg.org), you must, at no additional cost, fee or expense to the user, provide a copy, a means of exporting a copy, or a means of obtaining a copy upon request, of the work in its original “Plain Vanilla ASCII” or other form. Any alternate format must include the full Project Gutenberg License as specified in paragraph 1.E.1.

1.E.7. Do not charge a fee for access to, viewing, displaying, performing, copying or distributing any Project Gutenberg works unless you comply with paragraph 1.E.8 or 1.E.9.

1.E.8. You may charge a reasonable fee for copies of or providing access to or distributing Project Gutenberg electronic works provided that:

- You pay a royalty fee of 20% of the gross profits you derive from the use of Project Gutenberg works calculated using the method you already use to calculate your applicable taxes. The fee is owed to the owner of the Project Gutenberg trademark, but he has agreed to donate royalties under this paragraph to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation. Royalty payments must be paid within 60 days following each date on which you prepare (or are legally required to prepare) your periodic tax returns. Royalty payments should be clearly marked as such and sent to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation at the address specified in Section 4, "Information about donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation."
- You provide a full refund of any money paid by a user who notifies you in writing (or by e-mail) within 30 days of receipt that s/he does not agree to the terms of the full Project Gutenberg™ License. You must require such a user to return or destroy all copies of the works possessed in a physical medium and discontinue all use of and all access to other copies of Project Gutenberg™ works.
- You provide, in accordance with paragraph 1.F.3, a full refund of any money paid for a work or a replacement copy, if a defect in the electronic work is discovered and reported to you within 90 days of receipt of the work.
- You comply with all other terms of this agreement for free distribution of Project Gutenberg™ works.

1.E.9. If you wish to charge a fee or distribute a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work or group of works on different terms than are set forth in this agreement, you must obtain permission in writing from the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, the manager of the Project

Gutenberg™ trademark. Contact the Foundation as set forth in Section 3 below.

1.F.

1.F.1. Project Gutenberg volunteers and employees expend considerable effort to identify, do copyright research on, transcribe and proofread works not protected by U.S. copyright law in creating the Project Gutenberg™ collection. Despite these efforts, Project Gutenberg™ electronic works, and the medium on which they may be stored, may contain “Defects,” such as, but not limited to, incomplete, inaccurate or corrupt data, transcription errors, a copyright or other intellectual property infringement, a defective or damaged disk or other medium, a computer virus, or computer codes that damage or cannot be read by your equipment.

1.F.2. LIMITED WARRANTY, DISCLAIMER OF DAMAGES - Except for the “Right of Replacement or Refund” described in paragraph 1.F.3, the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, the owner of the Project Gutenberg™ trademark, and any other party distributing a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work under this agreement, disclaim all liability to you for damages, costs and expenses, including legal fees. YOU AGREE THAT YOU HAVE NO REMEDIES FOR NEGLIGENCE, STRICT LIABILITY, BREACH OF WARRANTY OR BREACH OF CONTRACT EXCEPT THOSE PROVIDED IN PARAGRAPH 1.F.3. YOU AGREE THAT THE FOUNDATION, THE TRADEMARK OWNER, AND ANY DISTRIBUTOR UNDER THIS AGREEMENT WILL NOT BE LIABLE TO YOU FOR ACTUAL, DIRECT, INDIRECT, CONSEQUENTIAL, PUNITIVE OR INCIDENTAL DAMAGES EVEN IF YOU GIVE NOTICE OF THE POSSIBILITY OF SUCH DAMAGE.

1.F.3. LIMITED RIGHT OF REPLACEMENT OR REFUND - If you discover a defect in this electronic work within 90 days of receiving it, you can receive a refund of the money (if any) you paid for it by sending a written explanation to the person you received the work from. If you received the work on a physical medium, you must return the medium with your written explanation. The person or entity that provided you with the defective work may elect to provide a replacement copy in lieu of a refund. If you received the work electronically, the person or entity providing it to you may choose to give you a second opportunity to receive the work electronically in lieu of a refund. If the second copy is also defective, you may demand a refund in writing without further opportunities to fix the problem.

1.F.4. Except for the limited right of replacement or refund set forth in paragraph 1.F.3, this work is provided to you 'AS-IS', WITH NO OTHER WARRANTIES OF ANY KIND, EXPRESS OR IMPLIED, INCLUDING BUT NOT LIMITED TO WARRANTIES OF MERCHANTABILITY OR FITNESS FOR ANY PURPOSE.

1.F.5. Some states do not allow disclaimers of certain implied warranties or the exclusion or limitation of certain types of damages. If any disclaimer or limitation set forth in this agreement violates the law of the state applicable to this agreement, the agreement shall be interpreted to make the maximum disclaimer or limitation permitted by the applicable state law. The invalidity or unenforceability of any provision of this agreement shall not void the remaining provisions.

1.F.6. INDEMNITY - You agree to indemnify and hold the Foundation, the trademark owner, any agent or employee of the Foundation, anyone providing copies of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works in accordance with this agreement, and any volunteers associated with the production, promotion and distribution of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works, harmless from all liability, costs and expenses, including legal fees, that arise directly or indirectly from any of the following which you do or cause to occur: (a) distribution of this or any Project Gutenberg work, (b) alteration, modification, or additions or deletions to any Project Gutenberg work, and (c) any Defect you cause.

Section 2. Information about the Mission of Project Gutenberg

Project Gutenberg is synonymous with the free distribution of electronic works in formats readable by the widest variety of computers including obsolete, old, middle-aged and new computers. It exists because of the efforts of hundreds of volunteers and donations from people in all walks of life.

Volunteers and financial support to provide volunteers with the assistance they need are critical to reaching Project Gutenberg's goals and ensuring that the Project Gutenberg collection will remain freely available for generations to come. In 2001, the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation was created to provide a secure and permanent future for Project Gutenberg and future generations. To learn more about the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation and how your efforts and donations can help, see Sections 3 and 4 and the Foundation information page at www.gutenberg.org.

Section 3. Information about the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation

The Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation is a non-profit 501(c)(3) educational corporation organized under the laws of the state of Mississippi and granted tax exempt status by the Internal Revenue Service. The Foundation's EIN or federal tax identification number is 64-6221541. Contributions to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation are tax deductible to the full extent permitted by U.S. federal laws and your state's laws.

The Foundation's business office is located at 41 Watchung Plaza #516, Montclair NJ 07042, USA, +1 (862) 621-9288. Email contact links and up to date contact information can be found at the Foundation's website and official page at www.gutenberg.org/contact

Section 4. Information about Donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation

Project Gutenberg™ depends upon and cannot survive without widespread public support and donations to carry out its mission of increasing the number of public domain and licensed works that can be freely distributed in machine-readable form accessible by the widest array of equipment including outdated equipment. Many small donations ($1 to $5,000) are particularly important to maintaining tax exempt status with the IRS.

The Foundation is committed to complying with the laws regulating charities and charitable donations in all 50 states of the United States. Compliance requirements are not uniform and it takes a considerable effort, much paperwork and many fees to meet and keep up with these requirements. We do not solicit donations in locations where we have not received written confirmation of compliance. To SEND DONATIONS or determine the status of compliance for any particular state visit www.gutenberg.org/donate.

While we cannot and do not solicit contributions from states where we have not met the solicitation requirements, we know of no prohibition against accepting unsolicited donations from donors in such states who approach us with offers to donate.

International donations are gratefully accepted, but we cannot make any statements concerning tax treatment of donations received from outside the United States. U.S. laws alone swamp our small staff.

Please check the Project Gutenberg web pages for current donation methods and addresses. Donations are accepted in a number of other ways including checks, online payments and credit card donations. To donate, please visit: www.gutenberg.org/donate.

Section 5. General Information About Project Gutenberg electronic works

Professor Michael S. Hart was the originator of the Project Gutenberg concept of a library of electronic works that could be freely shared with anyone. For forty years, he produced and distributed Project Gutenberg eBooks with only a loose network of volunteer support.

Project Gutenberg eBooks are often created from several printed editions, all of which are confirmed as not protected by copyright in the U.S. unless a copyright notice is included. Thus, we do not necessarily keep eBooks in compliance with any particular paper edition.

Most people start at our website which has the main PG search facility:
www.gutenberg.org.

This website includes information about Project Gutenberg, including how to make donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, how to help produce our new eBooks, and how to subscribe to our email newsletter to hear about new eBooks.