

AND
FANTASTIC UNIVERSE
SCIENCE FICTION

FEB.
35c

FEATURING TWO STARTLING NOVELETS

THE END OF THE JOURNEY by Edmund Cooper
PASSAGE TO ANYWHERE by Sam Merwin Jr.

ANC

FANTASTIC UNIVERSE

SCIENCE FICTION

FEB.
35c

FEATURING TWO STARTLING NOVELETS

THE END OF THE JOURNEY by Edmund Cooper

PASSAGE TO ANYWHERE by Sam Merwin Jr.

The Project Gutenberg eBook of The man who had spiders

This eBook is for the use of anyone anywhere in the United States and most other parts of the world at no cost and with almost no restrictions whatsoever. You may copy it, give it away or re-use it under the terms of the Project Gutenberg License included with this eBook or online at www.gutenberg.org. If you are not located in the United States, you will have to check the laws of the country where you are located before using this eBook.

Title: The man who had spiders

Author: Roger D. Aycock

Illustrator: Kelly Freas

Release date: January 9, 2026 [eBook #77665]

Language: English

Original publication: New York: King-Size Publications, Inc., 1955

Other information and formats: www.gutenberg.org/ebooks/77665

Credits: Tom Trussel (This file was produced from images generously made available by The Internet Archive)

 START OF THE PROJECT GUTENBERG EBOOK THE MAN WHO HAD SPIDERS ***

The Man who had Spiders

by Roger Dee

All too modestly, we feel, has Roger Dee tried to shrug off his undoubted kinship to Saki—that master of whimsical fantasy supreme—in this ebulliently breathtaking excursion into a realm as darkly mysterious as it is irresistibly enchanting. Adrian’s spiders may make your flesh crawl. But we predict you’ll like Adrian himself quite as much as did Mr. Marcus, and rejoice in his triumph.

There is probably more than one way of curing a tragic addiction to alcohol. But Adrian’s way was as shuddery as a smiling Medusa.

When Mr. Marcus, who had sold novelties to novelty shops for forty years and so had lost the capacity for astonishment at human unpredictability, returned to Maysville on the 8:04 train for his regular April week of selling, he went at once to Mrs. Ponder's boarding house and found Kitty playing Delibes on the living-room piano.

It was almost like coming home, Mr. Marcus thought with an uncharacteristic twinge of nostalgia. He paused for a moment in the doorway, suitcase and sample bag and his inevitable parcel of books in hand, to listen.

Tender was the word for Kitty, with her cool, sure touch on the Delibes theme and her clear blind eyes and her nestling of fair hair that just brushed her shoulders. And wasted, Mr. Marcus thought, with all the beauty and the talent of her shunted to obscurity in the dingy gentility of her mother's menage.

If he were thirty years younger—

Mr. Marcus cut the thought dead. If you were thirty years younger, Marcus, he told himself with dry cynicism, you'd travel and sell novelties. Just as you did thirty years ago. Kitty sensed his presence with the near-tactile acuity of the blind and let the Delibes theme trail off in a random tinkle.

"It's only I, Miss Kitty," Mr. Marcus said. "The old man who sells loaded cigars to idiots."

She turned on the piano bench, pleased at his coming but nevertheless disappointed. "Oh, Mr. Marcus. I thought at first you were Adrian."

"Adrian?"

She laughed, a sound as light and clear as the vanished music. "Adrian Hall, our new boarder. He's only been with us a week."

A week. Seven days, Mr. Marcus thought, and her face could light up so at the sound of his step?

When Kitty smiled it was impossible to think that her eyes could not see him. "You're thinking that my interest is unusual, and you're quite right. But Adrian is an unusual man, Mr. Marcus."

"I'm sure he is," Mr. Marcus said cautiously. "I'll have to meet him."

The prospect pleased her. "You were always nice to me and Jay Kirby because I'm blind and Jay has fits, but you never noticed anyone else. You'll notice Adrian. You'll like him."

"I'm sure I shall," Mr. Marcus said. Her eagerness made him feel old and tired and somehow resentful. The books and bags grew heavy in his hands. "I was just going upstairs to see if my room—"

Kitty's face lighted up. "Please wait," she begged. "I hear Adrian coming down now. We're going out for a drive, but I'd like you to meet him first."

The new boarder was perhaps thirty, hardly older than Kitty, and totally unremarkable. Shaking hands, Mr. Marcus cast back through the dry files of his memory and exhausted them without turning up a more ordinary face or figure. Moderately tall, he catalogued: average build, plain face, neutral hair, good teeth and mild blue eyes. The man's only distinction seemed to be a round, black mole on the left side of his neck, half hidden by his shirt-collar. Politely, Mr. Marcus did not look at it twice.

It rather startled him to discover that Kitty had been right. He did like Adrian Hall, at first sight and without reservation.

Mr. Marcus was never quite sure what was said during the shaking of hands. He was too absorbed in trying to justify such uncharacteristic regard to do more than nod when Adrian excused himself to hold Kitty's light coat for her. He did retain a bizarre impression when the two of them went out, however, that the new boarder's mole had shifted from the side to the back of his neck and was watching him with an air of amiable curiosity.

The conviction left Mr. Marcus more annoyed than disturbed. He'd have to see an oculist and have his lenses changed again, he told himself resignedly, as he climbed the stairs to his room.

Jay Kirby was waiting there for him, crouched against the farther wall like a fearful puppy hiding from the adult pack.

No other boarder in Mrs. Ponder's house would have dared violate Mr. Marcus' privacy, but Jay enjoyed the privilege of handicap and exercised it. Mr. Marcus sighed when he saw that Jay was suffering, or had just suffered, another of his periodic attacks. His corn-colored hair was wildly touseled, his blue eyes had fallen two octaves darker with stress and there was a wide smear of grime across one sweating cheek.

Jay was far too badly shaken to bother with greetings. “You got to do something about this Adrian Hall,” he blurted. “Mr. Marcus, he’s got spiders.”

Mr. Marcus found the proposition as repellent as it was improbable. Still, the turn of Jay’s latest fantasy intrigued him. Large spiders or small, he wondered, gray or black, poisonous or innocuous, caged or—

“Spiders?” He put his books and bags on the bed. “In his room, you mean?”

Jay denied it violently. “On him.”

Mr. Marcus wondered with some bitterness if nations would ever outgrow their penchant for expedient wars that left men broken as Jay Kirby was broken. Left alone Jay would have been a pleasant young man and a first-rate musician, but with the spirit of him maimed and trembling like a frightened child’s at the edge of nightmare—

Mr. Marcus opened his suitcase. “I brought you a record, Jay—something just released. A New Orleans stomp, the music-shop man said, with an alto sax that—”

Jay came across the room and clutched his arm, towering over him. “I didn’t shuck my wig this time, Mr. Marcus, honest. I really saw this. The guy had his clothes off, and he was all over spiders.”

Mr. Marcus felt a touch of chill. Jay had been committed twice before coming to rest at Mrs. Ponder’s; if he were sent away again, it might be for good.

“Sit down,” Mr. Marcus said. He sat down himself, on the room’s one chair. “Tell me about it, Jay, and from the beginning.”

Jay sat on the bed, and rose, and sat again. “It’d be all right if he’d keep them to himself,” he said. “I wouldn’t mind that because I like him. It’s Miss Kitty I’m worried about.”

“Miss Kitty?”

“Everybody likes Adrian, Mr. Marcus, but Miss Kitty’s in love with him. How’ll she feel when she finds out he’s got spiders?”

Mr. Marcus nodded gravely. “I can understand your concern. But Miss Kitty is blind, Jay. How can she find out?”

“I thought you’d see that right off,” Jay said, disappointed. “She’ll know when they get married, won’t she? She’ll have to know.”

Mr. Marcus permitted himself a small shudder. Jay had outdone himself this time.

“You saw these spiders, you said,” he reminded. “Where, and when?”

Jay got up and paced restlessly, limping. “Half an hour ago, when Adrian went up to shower and dress for his date with Miss Kitty. I was out on the porch roof, tightening a loose bathroom shutter I’d promised to fix for Mrs. Ponder, and—”

“You spied on him, Jay? In the bathroom?”

“I didn’t mean to,” Jay said defensively. “But I couldn’t look away after I saw the spiders. Could you?” He turned a stricken face to Mr. Marcus. “Mr. Marcus, he was all covered with them until he stepped into the shower. Then he held up a towel and they jumped on it to keep dry.”

“I see,” Mr. Marcus said. “And when he came out?”

“He dried himself off,” Jay said. “And they jumped on again.” He began to tremble with the violence of imminent seizure. “What am I going to do, Mr. Marcus? I like Adrian, but I like Miss Kitty, too. I can’t let him—”

Mr. Marcus rose hastily and led him to his room down the hall. “You won’t have to do anything,” he promised before he left Jay to have his fit in privacy. “Trust me, Jay. I’ll take care of it.”

It was not until later, when he had settled himself in his own room to a volume of Saki’s inhumanly perfect short stories, that he remembered the new boarder’s peregrinating mole.

“Can’t happen outside fiction,” he assured himself. “Tricks of the eyes, or else the fellow has two moles.”

But his eyesight was disturbingly good when he went down to breakfast next morning at seven and found himself seated beside Adrian Hall. Adrian was neatly dressed for work. He was a newspaper reporter, it developed, and was thinking seriously of launching a weekly of his own in Maysville—and he was every whit as likeable as he had been on the night before.

But not as unremarkable. This morning, he had no moles at all.

Forty years of selling novelties and reading books had not prepared Mr. Marcus for the role of detective that was thrust upon him, but it had given him a certain resourcefulness. Between stock-taking calls at local shops during the day he made discreet inquiries, and by nightfall had amassed a considerable array of fact and opinion.

The opinion was unfailingly enthusiastic. Never, Mr. Marcus thought, had a man been so instantly and universally liked in a town as small and insular as Maysville. Adrian Hall could have borrowed money from any bank, had any job or married any girl in the community.

What could make so plain a man so prepossessing Mr. Marcus could not imagine. He was certain only that he liked Mrs. Ponder's new boarder more than he had ever liked anyone in his life, and that he felt not only uncomfortable but downright guilty in spying out his personal affairs.

Actual fact was harder to arrive at. Adrian Hall had come from Kansas City, some two hundred miles distant. He was a good newspaperman and Gus Willis, who operated the Maysville Bugler, had liked him well enough—as who hadn't?—to hire him on sight. He was sober, industrious, efficient and considerate.

No one but Jay Kirby and Mr. Marcus seemed to suspect that he harbored spiders under his shirt. And Mr. Marcus, returning from his first day of selling and inquiry to find Adrian singing The Rose of Tralee with Kitty at the piano, found that repellent idea hard to believe.

Until, at supper again, he happened to look up quickly from his plate and discovered that the new boarder's elusive mole had returned. Mr. Marcus blinked and—he was quite positive, this time—it blinked genially back at him.

The conviction so unnerved him that he closed his eyes to defend his composure. When he opened them again the mole had gone, together with Mr. Marcus' lost appetite.

Mr. Marcus excused himself from table and went upstairs to his room. As he had expected, Jay Kirby was waiting for him again.

“Did you tell him?” Jay demanded. Mr. Marcus blinked, remembered the mole that had just blinked back at him, and shuddered.

“Did I tell what to whom?”

“Adrian,” Jay said. “Didn’t you tell him yet to get lost? How’re we going to keep him away from Miss Kitty unless we threaten to expose him?”

“I couldn’t do that,” Mr. Marcus said. “I like him too well.”

“So do I,” Jay said. “Damn him.”

Mr. Marcus went over the possibilities again and found nothing of promise.

“No one would believe us even if we tried to expose him,” he concluded. “We wouldn’t believe in his spiders ourselves if we hadn’t seen them.”

Jay began to sweat. “What are we going to do, Mr. Marcus? We can’t brace Adrian because we like him too much, and we can’t tell Miss Kitty what’s wrong with him. How are we going to keep them from getting married?”

It was a formidable question. Mr. Marcus evaded it by posing one of his own.

“How do you know they’ll be married, Jay? Has any announcement been made?”

“Not yet,” Jay said. “But there will be.”

Mr. Marcus sighed. “Then I’m afraid we’re stumped. I wish we knew more about him.”

A new avenue of approach occurred to him then, but Jay anticipated the inspiration. “You could find out something about him in Kansas City,” Jay said. “He was a newspaper reporter there once, wasn’t he?”

Mr. Marcus could not drop his selling—he had only two days left now before he must move downstate toward St. Louis—and go to Kansas City, but he could pursue his investigation by proxy. Providentially, he had a friend on the staff of the Kansas City Star who might do his leg work for him.

“It seems our last hope,” Mr. Marcus said. “I’ll make the call now.”

He preferred not to use the house telephone because of its several extensions, and the nearest booth stood in a corner of the neighborhood drugstore. Mr. Marcus went out and made his call, received his Kansas City friend's promise to do what he could, and returned to Mrs. Ponder's boarding house.

He found a small party in progress, with a beaming Mrs. Ponder and an assorted handful of her boarders gathered round Adrian Hall and Kitty. Lemonade flowed freely and an air of rejoicing prevailed.

"Congratulate me, Mr. Marcus," Kitty cried. "Adrian and I are going to be married."

Mr. Marcus congratulated them both with deepest sincerity. His scalp prickled only once during his well-wishings, when one of Adrian's—moles?—crept out of its shirt-collar, just below the Adam's apple this time, and peered at him complacently.

"God bless you both," Mr. Marcus finished, and fled upstairs.

But his room, for once, was not sanctuary.

For the first time in his life his books failed to sustain him and he felt truly alone and impotent, caught vicariously in exactly the sort of emotional muddle he had avoided so religiously. There was not even Jay Kirby to lean on in his extremity. Jay had heard the news of Kitty's engagement during Mr. Marcus' brief absence and had given way under the strain, suffering another of his fits in his own room.

Mrs. Ponder's tapping brought Mr. Marcus out of his funk, if briefly. "Telephone call for you," she said. "From Kansas City."

Mr. Marcus, knowing that Mrs. Ponder would eavesdrop if he used the upper hallway extension, took the call downstairs. It was his friend of the Star.

"Got the dirt you wanted right here in the office," his friend said cheerfully. "A question here, a phone call there, and it's wrapped up."

He gave his information tersely. "The guy's a bum, Marcus. He's been thrown off every paper in town for drinking—even Alcoholics Anonymous finally wrote him off as a lost cause."

Mr. Marcus said nothing. There were no words for what he felt.

“Wasn’t ever vicious,” his friend said. “He was just one of those poor fish with a twist, an uncontrollable drinker. Sponged handouts and probably stole a little on his bad days, but never robbed any banks. What’s he doing up there—more of the usual?”

Mr. Marcus found his voice. “Not at all. This must be a different Adrian Hall altogether.”

But it wasn’t. Mr. Marcus discovered that when he went upstairs again and found Adrian waiting for him by the upper hallway extension.

“I came up and listened in,” Adrian said. “I had an idea that you were checking on me, Mr. Marcus. When Mrs. Ponder told us you had a call from Kansas City, I was sure of it.”

“I had to do it,” Mr. Marcus said. “Once Jay had told me about your spiders, I had no choice.”

Adrian took Mr. Marcus’ arm and led him away down the hall. Mr. Marcus went along unprotestingly, numb with disbelief at his own composure. It was downright frightening, he thought, to find himself so unfrightened.

Adrian’s room was much like Mr. Marcus’ own, or like any other in the Ponder house. Adrian seated Mr. Marcus on his one chair and himself on the bed, and they measured each other equably over the flimsy expanse of Adrian’s writing-table.

In any decent piece of fiction, Mr. Marcus thought, there must be some element of suspense; in fiction running to such a situation as this, even of outright horror. But somehow, being dragged to the very lair of the monster he had set out to scotch brought him no touch of uneasiness. He felt sympathetic rather than fearful, and he liked Adrian Hall more, if that were possible, than ever.

“I’m really glad you unmasked me,” Adrian said. “I need help, Mr. Marcus. I need help more than I ever needed it in my life.”

“I’ll do anything within my power,” Mr. Marcus promised. “But I’m equally interested in helping Kitty, else I wouldn’t have bothered with your past at all.... Your problem is that you can’t keep your spiders and marry Kitty too, isn’t it?”

Adrian nodded. "It wouldn't work. Not because Kitty might object to them, for she wouldn't—they're not really offensive, and it's no fault of their own that they're here—but because a honeymoon without privacy is no honeymoon at all. My friends are quite intelligent, not to mention inquisitive, and keeping them wouldn't be fair to either Kitty or myself."

"You could get rid of them."

"That wouldn't be fair to them," Adrian said. "And since I'm responsible for their being here, and they're responsible for my reformation—"

He broke off apologetically. "It would be better if I told you about it from the beginning, wouldn't it?"

"It would," Mr. Marcus agreed, and settled himself to listen.

"First," Adrian said, "what your friend of the Star told you is perfectly true. I drank and scrounged quarters on the street and slept in gutters, not because I liked it but because I couldn't stop doing it any more than poor Jay Kirby can stop having fits. Until I got help, that is.

"I used to have the shakes regularly, like any other confirmed alcoholic. The d.t.'s can be pretty awful, you know, and my personal cross was to wake up from a binge and imagine myself all covered with spiders. It happened so many times that I lost count, and usually it meant several days in a hospital ward before I recovered.

"But one particular morning I woke up with spiders that wouldn't go away. They were real, though they weren't spiders at all, and they were anything but the horrors I'd dreamed of. They were such incredibly pleasant creatures—whatever they were, and are—that just being associated so closely with them made a new man of me overnight. I was perfectly happy until I came here and met Kitty."

"I can see they're not common or garden variety Arachnida," Mr. Marcus said. He could with justification, for two of them had perched on the rim of Adrian's collar and were observing him with a bland good-nature impossible to doubt. "You've no idea what they really are?"

"Not the faintest," Adrian said. "I'm not going to quote Hamlet, but a great many things happen every day in the world that no one understands. Personally, I think they were drawn here from some other plane or dimension by the strength of my obsession. I can't be sure of that because I can't talk to them, but I do feel that I'm responsible for them. And they've done so much for me that I can't just brush them off. It would be inhuman."

"You're right, of course," Mr. Marcus agreed. "But on the other hand, neither can you brush off Kitty. You're in the position of the man who couldn't go but couldn't stay."

Adrian nodded unhappily "There you have it. Mr. Marcus, what am I going to do?"

But Mr. Marcus, unlike the Saki he had been reading, had no instant and adequate answer.

And, since the next day was his last in Maysville for the season and he could not linger on in unemployment at Mrs. Ponder's even to help the couple who had become his dearest friends, he was forced to take the 8:04 to St. Louis without having discovered any solution to Adrian's problem.

It was a shame, Mr. Marcus thought when he was somewhere in the neighborhood of Hannibal, Missouri, that such things never seem to work out in everyday life as conveniently as they do in fiction. It was entirely possible that he might never learn the outcome of Adrian's problem, and at best he had a year to wait.

Mr. Marcus, at the end of his forty-first year of selling novelties to novelty shops, returned again to Maysville. But not immediately to Mrs. Ponder's boarding house.

A prosperously-dressed Adrian met him at the station with a conservative but handsome new station wagon. With Adrian was Kitty, still blind but lovelier than ever, and in Kitty's arms gurgled their firstborn, a boy named Marcus Jay Hall.

On their way to Mrs. Ponder's they passed first the offices of the Maysville Bugler, of which Adrian was now owner, and then the Hall's newly-financed home. A little later Adrian slowed the car to give Mr. Marcus a closer look at a neighborhood billboard advertising the excellence of Maysville's own dance band, a five-piece combo of which Jay Kirby seemed to be both originator and conductor. Jay's face, smiling and assured and with no trace of its old crippling tension, took up a large part of the poster. And a handsome face it was.

"Jay is the most popular man in Maysville nowadays," Adrian explained. "He could be mayor if he liked, but he'd rather play the saxophone."

A year had dulled Mr. Marcus' perception not at all. "You mean?" he said.

"Just so," Adrian agreed. "It worked out very well, after all. The worst of problems have a way of settling themselves without too much help, have you noticed? It was only a couple of nights after you left that Jay had another of his attacks and woke up with the conviction that he was covered with spiders. And he was, and everyone has been quite happy since."

It was a fair enough ending, Mr. Marcus granted, but his private opinion was that it lacked imagination. Saki, he felt sure, would have handled it better.

Transcriber's note:

This etext was produced from Fantastic Universe, February 1956 (Vol. 5, No. 1.). Extensive research did not uncover any evidence that the U.S. copyright on this publication was renewed.

Obvious errors have been silently corrected in this version, but minor inconsistencies have been retained as printed.

 END OF THE PROJECT GUTENBERG EBOOK THE MAN WHO HAD SPIDERS ***

Updated editions will replace the previous one—the old editions will be renamed.

Creating the works from print editions not protected by U.S. copyright law means that no one owns a United States copyright in these works, so the Foundation (and you!) can copy and distribute it in the United States without permission and without paying copyright royalties. Special rules, set forth in the General Terms of Use part of this license, apply to copying and distributing Project Gutenberg™ electronic works to protect the PROJECT GUTENBERG™ concept and trademark. Project Gutenberg is a registered trademark, and may not be used if you charge for an eBook, except by following the terms of the trademark license, including paying royalties for use of the Project Gutenberg trademark. If you do not charge anything for copies of this eBook, complying with the trademark license is very easy. You may use this eBook for nearly any purpose such as creation of derivative works, reports, performances and research. Project Gutenberg eBooks may be modified and printed and given away—you may do practically ANYTHING in the United States with eBooks not protected by U.S. copyright law. Redistribution is subject to the trademark license, especially commercial redistribution.

START: FULL LICENSE

THE FULL PROJECT GUTENBERG™ LICENSE

PLEASE READ THIS BEFORE YOU DISTRIBUTE OR USE THIS WORK

To protect the Project Gutenberg™ mission of promoting the free distribution of electronic works, by using or distributing this work (or any other work associated in any way with the phrase “Project Gutenberg”), you agree to comply with all the terms of the Full Project Gutenberg License available with this file or online at www.gutenberg.org/license.

Section 1. General Terms of Use and Redistributing Project Gutenberg electronic works

1.A. By reading or using any part of this Project Gutenberg electronic work, you indicate that you have read, understand, agree to and accept all the terms of this license and intellectual property (trademark/copyright) agreement. If you do not agree to abide by all the terms of this agreement, you must cease using and return or destroy all copies of Project Gutenberg electronic works in your possession. If you paid a fee for obtaining a copy of or access to a Project Gutenberg electronic work and you do not agree to be bound by the terms of this agreement, you may obtain a refund from the person or entity to whom you paid the fee as set forth in paragraph 1.E.8.

1.B. “Project Gutenberg” is a registered trademark. It may only be used on or associated in any way with an electronic work by people who agree to be bound by the terms of this agreement. There are a few things that you can do with most Project Gutenberg electronic works even without complying with the full terms of this agreement. See paragraph 1.C below. There are a lot of things you can do with Project Gutenberg electronic works if you follow the terms of this agreement and help preserve free future access to Project Gutenberg electronic works. See paragraph 1.E below.

1.C. The Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation (“the Foundation” or PGLAF), owns a compilation copyright in the collection of Project Gutenberg electronic works. Nearly all the individual works in the collection are in the public domain in the United States. If an individual work is unprotected by copyright law in the United States and you are located in the United States, we do not claim a right to prevent you from copying, distributing, performing, displaying or creating derivative works based on the work as long as all references to Project Gutenberg are removed. Of course, we hope that you will support the Project Gutenberg mission of promoting free access to electronic works by freely sharing Project Gutenberg works in compliance with the terms of this agreement for keeping the Project Gutenberg name associated with the work. You can easily comply with the terms of this agreement by keeping this work in the same format with its attached full Project Gutenberg License when you share it without charge with others.

1.D. The copyright laws of the place where you are located also govern what you can do with this work. Copyright laws in most countries are in a constant state of change. If you are outside the United States, check the laws of your country in addition to the terms of this agreement before downloading, copying, displaying, performing, distributing or creating derivative works based on this work or any other Project Gutenberg work. The Foundation makes no representations concerning the copyright status of any work in any country other than the United States.

1.E. Unless you have removed all references to Project Gutenberg:

1.E.1. The following sentence, with active links to, or other immediate access to, the full Project Gutenberg License must appear prominently whenever any copy of a Project Gutenberg work (any work on which the phrase “Project Gutenberg” appears, or with which the phrase “Project Gutenberg” is associated) is accessed, displayed, performed, viewed, copied or distributed:

This eBook is for the use of anyone anywhere in the United States and most other parts of the world at no cost and with almost no restrictions whatsoever. You may copy it, give it away or re-use it under the terms of the Project Gutenberg™ License included with this eBook or online at www.gutenberg.org. If you are not located in the United States, you will have to check the laws of the country where you are located before using this eBook.

1.E.2. If an individual Project Gutenberg electronic work is derived from texts not protected by U.S. copyright law (does not contain a notice indicating that it is posted with permission of the copyright holder), the work can be copied and distributed to anyone in the United States without paying any fees or charges. If you are redistributing or providing access to a work with the phrase “Project Gutenberg” associated with or appearing on the work, you must comply either with the requirements of paragraphs 1.E.1 through 1.E.7 or obtain permission for the use of the work and the Project Gutenberg trademark as set forth in paragraphs 1.E.8 or 1.E.9.

1.E.3. If an individual Project Gutenberg electronic work is posted with the permission of the copyright holder, your use and distribution must comply with both paragraphs 1.E.1 through 1.E.7 and any additional terms imposed by the copyright holder. Additional terms will be linked to the Project Gutenberg License for all works posted with the permission of the copyright holder found at the beginning of this work.

1.E.4. Do not unlink or detach or remove the full Project Gutenberg License terms from this work, or any files containing a part of this work or any other work associated with Project Gutenberg.

1.E.5. Do not copy, display, perform, distribute or redistribute this electronic work, or any part of this electronic work, without prominently displaying the sentence set forth in paragraph 1.E.1 with active links or immediate access to the full terms of the Project Gutenberg License.

1.E.6. You may convert to and distribute this work in any binary, compressed, marked up, nonproprietary or proprietary form, including any word processing or hypertext form. However, if you provide access to or distribute copies of a Project Gutenberg work in a format other than “Plain Vanilla ASCII” or other format used in the official version posted on the official Project Gutenberg website (www.gutenberg.org), you must, at no additional cost, fee or expense to the user, provide a copy, a means of exporting a copy, or a means of obtaining a copy upon request, of the work in its original “Plain Vanilla ASCII” or other form. Any alternate format must include the full Project Gutenberg License as specified in paragraph 1.E.1.

1.E.7. Do not charge a fee for access to, viewing, displaying, performing, copying or distributing any Project Gutenberg works unless you comply with paragraph 1.E.8 or 1.E.9.

1.E.8. You may charge a reasonable fee for copies of or providing access to or distributing Project Gutenberg electronic works provided that:

- You pay a royalty fee of 20% of the gross profits you derive from the use of Project Gutenberg works calculated using the method you already use to calculate your applicable taxes. The fee is owed to the owner of the Project Gutenberg trademark, but he has agreed to donate royalties under this paragraph to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation. Royalty payments must be paid within 60 days following each date on which you prepare (or are legally required to prepare) your periodic tax returns. Royalty payments should be clearly marked as such and sent to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation at the address specified in Section 4, "Information about donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation."
- You provide a full refund of any money paid by a user who notifies you in writing (or by e-mail) within 30 days of receipt that s/he does not agree to the terms of the full Project Gutenberg™ License. You must require such a user to return or destroy all copies of the works possessed in a physical medium and discontinue all use of and all access to other copies of Project Gutenberg™ works.
- You provide, in accordance with paragraph 1.F.3, a full refund of any money paid for a work or a replacement copy, if a defect in the electronic work is discovered and reported to you within 90 days of receipt of the work.
- You comply with all other terms of this agreement for free distribution of Project Gutenberg™ works.

1.E.9. If you wish to charge a fee or distribute a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work or group of works on different terms than are set forth in this agreement, you must obtain permission in writing from the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, the manager of the Project

Gutenberg™ trademark. Contact the Foundation as set forth in Section 3 below.

1.F.

1.F.1. Project Gutenberg volunteers and employees expend considerable effort to identify, do copyright research on, transcribe and proofread works not protected by U.S. copyright law in creating the Project Gutenberg™ collection. Despite these efforts, Project Gutenberg™ electronic works, and the medium on which they may be stored, may contain “Defects,” such as, but not limited to, incomplete, inaccurate or corrupt data, transcription errors, a copyright or other intellectual property infringement, a defective or damaged disk or other medium, a computer virus, or computer codes that damage or cannot be read by your equipment.

1.F.2. LIMITED WARRANTY, DISCLAIMER OF DAMAGES - Except for the “Right of Replacement or Refund” described in paragraph 1.F.3, the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, the owner of the Project Gutenberg™ trademark, and any other party distributing a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work under this agreement, disclaim all liability to you for damages, costs and expenses, including legal fees. YOU AGREE THAT YOU HAVE NO REMEDIES FOR NEGLIGENCE, STRICT LIABILITY, BREACH OF WARRANTY OR BREACH OF CONTRACT EXCEPT THOSE PROVIDED IN PARAGRAPH 1.F.3. YOU AGREE THAT THE FOUNDATION, THE TRADEMARK OWNER, AND ANY DISTRIBUTOR UNDER THIS AGREEMENT WILL NOT BE LIABLE TO YOU FOR ACTUAL, DIRECT, INDIRECT, CONSEQUENTIAL, PUNITIVE OR INCIDENTAL DAMAGES EVEN IF YOU GIVE NOTICE OF THE POSSIBILITY OF SUCH DAMAGE.

1.F.3. LIMITED RIGHT OF REPLACEMENT OR REFUND - If you discover a defect in this electronic work within 90 days of receiving it, you can receive a refund of the money (if any) you paid for it by sending a written explanation to the person you received the work from. If you received the work on a physical medium, you must return the medium with your written explanation. The person or entity that provided you with the defective work may elect to provide a replacement copy in lieu of a refund. If you received the work electronically, the person or entity providing it to you may choose to give you a second opportunity to receive the work electronically in lieu of a refund. If the second copy is also defective, you may demand a refund in writing without further opportunities to fix the problem.

1.F.4. Except for the limited right of replacement or refund set forth in paragraph 1.F.3, this work is provided to you 'AS-IS', WITH NO OTHER WARRANTIES OF ANY KIND, EXPRESS OR IMPLIED, INCLUDING BUT NOT LIMITED TO WARRANTIES OF MERCHANTABILITY OR FITNESS FOR ANY PURPOSE.

1.F.5. Some states do not allow disclaimers of certain implied warranties or the exclusion or limitation of certain types of damages. If any disclaimer or limitation set forth in this agreement violates the law of the state applicable to this agreement, the agreement shall be interpreted to make the maximum disclaimer or limitation permitted by the applicable state law. The invalidity or unenforceability of any provision of this agreement shall not void the remaining provisions.

1.F.6. INDEMNITY - You agree to indemnify and hold the Foundation, the trademark owner, any agent or employee of the Foundation, anyone providing copies of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works in accordance with this agreement, and any volunteers associated with the production, promotion and distribution of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works, harmless from all liability, costs and expenses, including legal fees, that arise directly or indirectly from any of the following which you do or cause to occur: (a) distribution of this or any Project Gutenberg work, (b) alteration, modification, or additions or deletions to any Project Gutenberg work, and (c) any Defect you cause.

Section 2. Information about the Mission of Project Gutenberg

Project Gutenberg is synonymous with the free distribution of electronic works in formats readable by the widest variety of computers including obsolete, old, middle-aged and new computers. It exists because of the efforts of hundreds of volunteers and donations from people in all walks of life.

Volunteers and financial support to provide volunteers with the assistance they need are critical to reaching Project Gutenberg's goals and ensuring that the Project Gutenberg collection will remain freely available for generations to come. In 2001, the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation was created to provide a secure and permanent future for Project Gutenberg and future generations. To learn more about the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation and how your efforts and donations can help, see Sections 3 and 4 and the Foundation information page at www.gutenberg.org.

Section 3. Information about the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation

The Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation is a non-profit 501(c)(3) educational corporation organized under the laws of the state of Mississippi and granted tax exempt status by the Internal Revenue Service. The Foundation's EIN or federal tax identification number is 64-6221541. Contributions to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation are tax deductible to the full extent permitted by U.S. federal laws and your state's laws.

The Foundation's business office is located at 41 Watchung Plaza #516, Montclair NJ 07042, USA, +1 (862) 621-9288. Email contact links and up to date contact information can be found at the Foundation's website and official page at www.gutenberg.org/contact

Section 4. Information about Donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation

Project Gutenberg™ depends upon and cannot survive without widespread public support and donations to carry out its mission of increasing the number of public domain and licensed works that can be freely distributed in machine-readable form accessible by the widest array of equipment including outdated equipment. Many small donations ($1 to $5,000) are particularly important to maintaining tax exempt status with the IRS.

The Foundation is committed to complying with the laws regulating charities and charitable donations in all 50 states of the United States. Compliance requirements are not uniform and it takes a considerable effort, much paperwork and many fees to meet and keep up with these requirements. We do not solicit donations in locations where we have not received written confirmation of compliance. To SEND DONATIONS or determine the status of compliance for any particular state visit www.gutenberg.org/donate.

While we cannot and do not solicit contributions from states where we have not met the solicitation requirements, we know of no prohibition against accepting unsolicited donations from donors in such states who approach us with offers to donate.

International donations are gratefully accepted, but we cannot make any statements concerning tax treatment of donations received from outside the United States. U.S. laws alone swamp our small staff.

Please check the Project Gutenberg web pages for current donation methods and addresses. Donations are accepted in a number of other ways including checks, online payments and credit card donations. To donate, please visit: www.gutenberg.org/donate.

Section 5. General Information About Project Gutenberg electronic works

Professor Michael S. Hart was the originator of the Project Gutenberg concept of a library of electronic works that could be freely shared with anyone. For forty years, he produced and distributed Project Gutenberg eBooks with only a loose network of volunteer support.

Project Gutenberg eBooks are often created from several printed editions, all of which are confirmed as not protected by copyright in the U.S. unless a copyright notice is included. Thus, we do not necessarily keep eBooks in compliance with any particular paper edition.

Most people start at our website which has the main PG search facility:
www.gutenberg.org.

This website includes information about Project Gutenberg, including how to make donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, how to help produce our new eBooks, and how to subscribe to our email newsletter to hear about new eBooks.